MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 110, No. 1 — December 31, 1932

LET'S GET COMMERCIAL

ONE of the sensational aspects of this issue of Motion Picture Herald is in its careful avoidance of resumes of the bad news of 1932 and its even more careful avoidance of forecasts for 1933 from the authorities who suffered the aforesaid 1932.

But editors will be editors and there must be a New Year's message. It is our serious, dignified, solemn plea to this industry to please get commercial, to engage in the production of motion pictures with a single idea of making money—money for the maker, money for the distributor and money for the exhibitor. This will require also entertainment for consumers.

Just to avoid, in this happy holiday season, naming names and hurting the feelings of a number of friends and producers, let it be remarked as a generality that the only really good motion pictures of 1932 have been too infernally smart.

In spite of every possible excuse and some that were impossible, the writer of this page has seen many motion pictures in the year just agone or agoing. All those that were good were too good, too intelligent, too demanding of thought, or else far too expensive. Most of them were made by brilliant young men engaged in making names and making fame, for themselves or their friends. Several of them were elaborately made from plays and novels that were written for tiny minority audiences. Now no matter how you may distort and "dumb-up" a castle it is never a bungalow.

The motion picture and its production community smarted a long time over the taunts of writers who called it lowbrow. To prove its intelligence it has gone to such spokesmen of the masses as Lewis, Dreiser, Hemingway and their ilk.

It is now admitted that when Hollywood reads, it reads the best of them. But that's been proved. Now let's let it stand.

Along about 1898 a Klondike millionaire with his pockets heavy with dust and nuggets came to New York. He heard that Martin's in Fifth Avenue was "the best place to eat, but expensive." He rolled into the restaurant one evening and took a table looking into Madison Square. He tossed aside the meaningless menu and roared at the waiter: "Bring me fifty dollars worth of ham and eggs."

And that is supposed to be a suggestion to the vendors of caviar.

ELECTRIFYING THE DOLLAR

WE laughed all the way from Cos Cob to Mamaroneck a-commuting to the job yesterday at reflections on the solemn suggestion of the scientists in convention assembled with the Econometric Society at Atlantic City that the nation's currency be established on the new basis of the average cost of the kilowatt hour of energy production.

You may consider this absurd as something to worry about, but let it be observed in passing that several years ago, when this industry had a dollar, the scientists, many of them the same persons, conspired to endow our art with sound.

If, as they seriously propose, a bond assured promise of the future production of forty kilowatt hours of juice by an electrical company is to be taken as the foundation of a dollar, how much currency ought to be issued on a guaranty from Mr. Charles Chaplin that he will knock 'em out of their seats with seven reels in 1935? As far as we can see, which is too far for comfort, there is more sense in a celluloid dollar issued against entertainment hours than the current project which draws columns of page one area in newspapers that ought to know better. Further, these scientific gentlemen have the presumption to propose calling it the "Edison Dollar". That is taking extraordinary advantage of Mr. Edison, the father of all the kilowatts. Were he alive to comment, his remarks would be more aromatic than encouraging.

The proponents of the Edison Dollar, who ask for the national average cost of generating 40 kilowatt hours as the basis of the American dollar, have done well by their press agents, but the commercial departments of the great electrical interests are likely to apply big feet to tender posteriors when the retail rate issue comes up. Just between Cos Cob and Mamaroneck, as we crossed the state line between Connecticut and New York, the reflection arose that although 40 kilowatt hours are generated for a dollar, one kilowatt hour costs about 3 cents to the retail consumer in Connecticut and over the line in New York from 7 to 12½ cents.

Perhaps the motion picture industry as a large consumer might well raise some questions about this matter of kilowatt hours and dollars.

THE BOURBON TOUCH

MERIT just will prevail. Our own and handsome Mr. Charles E. ("Chick") Lewis, exhibitor, publicist and editor of the Round Table section, has just received his official commission as a Colonel of the military staff of the Governor of the sovereign State of Kentucky. The staff of Motion Picture Herald has long included several A.B.'s, at least one electrical engineer with lots of B.S. from several universities, the same being an ex-bartender, too; one ex-locomotive engineer, two ex-press agents, and a brace of ex-film executives. What we really needed was a Kentucky Colonel. "Colonel Lewis" sounds pleasing. The only other Colonel Lewis we ever knew is from Illinois, Colonel J. Ham Lewis, and he has pink whiskers. Our new Colonel hasn't any. 1933 looks like a great little year, from here.

Four Men Who Dared

Those who conceived and brought to fruition the ambitious enterprise that is now Radio City

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

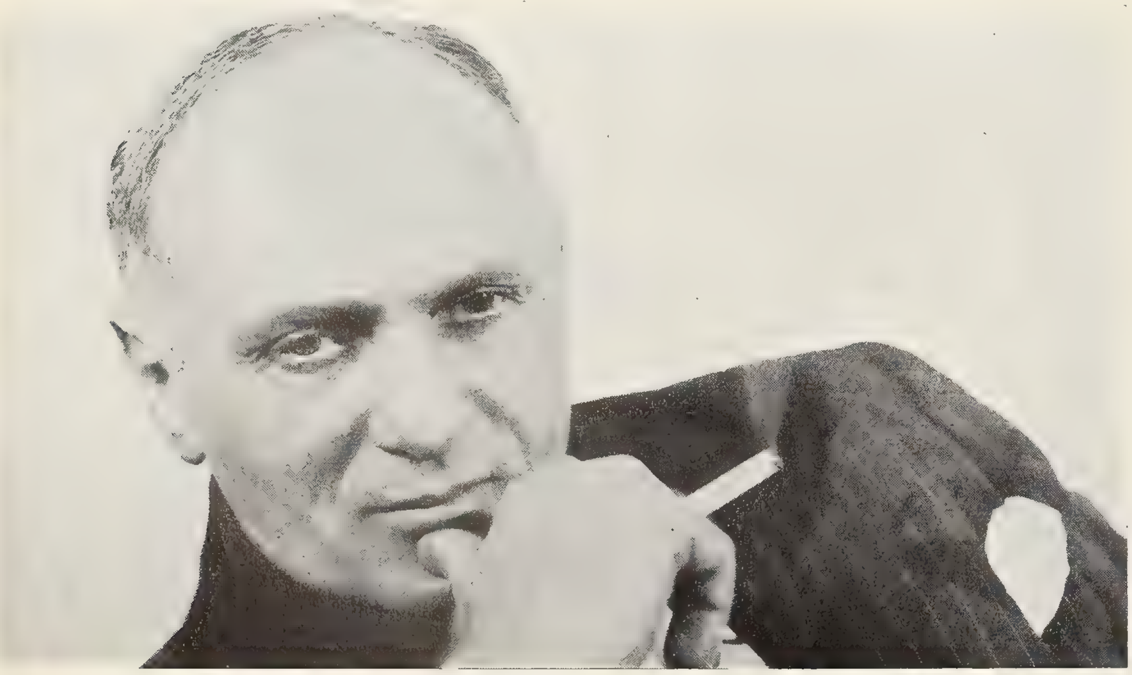
Active head of one of the world's mightiest oil domains as successor to the original "John D." He carries on where the father left off, his interests powerful in commerce, vaster still and more enduring in philanthropy. Chairman of board, Rockefeller Foundation (scientific research); trustee, Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research; associated with Bureau of Social Hygiene, International Health Board, China Medical Board. Means more to the University, Alpha Delta Phi, Brown University, City Midday, Recess, Bankers, Sleepy Hollow Country and other clubs than they mean to him.

M. H. AYLESWORTH

Proceeding from law to public utilities to radio entertainment, he added theatres to his interests by becoming president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, while still remaining head of the National Broadcasting Company, which he became when the development of shows by wireless prompted the founding of that corporation. Has sought education assiduously, schools he has attended including the University of Denver, Colorado Agricultural College, University of Denver, University of Wisconsin and Columbia. Practiced law in Fort Collins, Colo., but quit professional life to run corporations.

DAVID SARNOFF

President and director of the Radio Corporation of America and chairman of the board of Radio-Keith-Orpheum. Yet he is only 41. A boy of nine when his parents brought him from Uzlian, Minsk, Russia, and not much older when he stuck 72 hours to his post taking wireless reports of the sinking Titanic. He was a junior Marconi operator then, but his heroism brought quick promotion, making him commercial manager of the Marconi company. Absorption of Marconi by the new Radio Corporation of America brought him into the company he now heads. He has never worked outside the communications field.



Rothafel is a name almost obliterated by "Roxy," which now joins Bailey, Barnum, Ringling, Frohman, Belasco and others on the roster of American showmen, and which will ultimately become quasi-legendary. The Roxy medium is according to his own day. Although it branches out, its origins and associations belong to the motion picture. Coming from the Middle West to New York when a lad, he worked at many things, but finally found himself running a picture theatre in Pennsylvania. Returning to the Middle West, he began to add singers and orchestras to his screen program, and the rest was merely a matter of how far they'd let him go.

INDUSTRY STARTS ARBITRATION FEB. 15; DISTRIBUTORS ADOPT APPEALS BOARD

Official Announcement Awaited from Distributors Indicating Adoption of S. R. Kent's Program for Correcting Ills

MPTO State Affiliates Are Now Ratifying Proposals; Allied Continues with Plans for Federal Legislative Campaign

The Sidney R. Kent program for correcting trade practices will soon be an integral part of film distribution machinery. The national appeals board for adjusting major differences and an optional form of exhibition contract which contains a clause permitting voluntary arbitration of local disputes are expected to become operative between February 1 and February 15. The sponsors believe that both will pave the way for better relations between buyer and seller of motion pictures.

Distributor signatories of the pact will, within a few days, make official announcement, individually, of their acceptance of the board of appeals. Final adoption of the board by several companies followed a series of conferences between the respective legal and sales departments and a committee of theatre owners. The contract and arbitration planks of Mr. Kent's plan were accepted previously.

Meanwhile, Allied States Association appears to be intent on proceeding with a campaign for federal legislation. Word was dispatched from national headquarters to the membership at large requesting contributions of $25 each to finance lobbying activities in connection with the crusade. There are no current indications that Allied will swing to the industry program. Leaders of the association said last month that they would proceed with a legislative policy unless and until the distributors agreed to the Kent proposals. They insisted at that time that all distributor-circuits participate.

Allied's national directorate will assemble at headquarters in Washington on January 5th to discuss progress of the campaign. Each member is supposed to have in hand a list of federal legislators who have been approached on the matter either in person or by letter.

On the other hand, members of the MPTOA are prepared to use the contract and the arbitration system. M. A. Lightman, president, sent word from Memphis Tuesday that his organization "is meeting with huge success in getting wires of ratification from the directors of our state affiliates."

Six Distributors To Use Contract

Fox, Universal, Paramount, Metro, Educational-World Wide and RKO are definitely committed to the program. Universal is understood to be the only company which has not completed negotiations on the appeals board. Willard McKay, counsel for the corporation said Tuesday that there remained only a few details to be clarified. This was to be done, he said, in a few days.

"Every single objection raised by the distributors to the appeals board has finally been overcome," according to a spokesman for the negotiating committee. He said this week that the objections were based principally on the unfamiliarity of distributors with the modus operandi of the pact and that the purposes have not been changed.

The legal directors of the various distributors are understood to be preparing the text of the appeals board agreement, and the official announcement of acceptance.

Columbia Pictures and United Artists are still reconsidering their original rejections of the pact. In both cases the company's legal advisors are against adoption, while the sales departments favor it. Present indications are that the sales executives will win out. Warner Brothers has not been committed either way.

The local arbitration system, according to a distributor spokesman, is intended to create a form of "home rule" in the territories as the basic means of abolishing the many deep-rooted disputes which have prevailed over a long period between the independent owners, exchanges and affiliated theatres. These disputes involve protection, zoning, admissions, double features and the like.

There are no specific meeting places mentioned for the arbitration boards, but it is expected that many will probably collect periodically in the key city offices of the Film Boards of Trade. This is not compulsory, the agreement merely insisting that all sessions be held in the distribution centers in which the principals operate.

"It is now up to the people in each territory to adjust their own situation," said the distributor representative. "They will be permitted to do this as they see fit. They have the means and they will be left alone to proceed along their own desires."

Board in Effect Three Years

The arbitration clause and optional exhibition contract were accepted several weeks ago for three years, but distributors refused at that time to agree to a similar period on the national appeals board. They insisted that it should first be tried for one year, at the end of which changes in operation could be made if deemed necessary. However, an indefinite period of experimentation has now been decided upon, although the life of the pact will continue for three years. Periodically, the interested parties will review the work of the board for purposes of correction.

Fundamental principles of the appelate body have been established, but actual details of procedure will be left for the board to work out. Inasmuch as the board will take its cases from the local arbitration units, whenever the arbitration boards are unable to agree, there is little likelihood that the appeals council will have any cases before it for three or four months.

The board of appeals will be composed of exhibitors and sales managers of companies participating in the pact. For the ordinary run of cases there will be three representatives of disinterested distributors and three independent exhibitors. On so-called "extraordinary" cases, or on those cases where an affiliated circuit is involved, the board will be composed of four independent exhibitors, two distributor and two circuit representatives.

At all times the plaintiff and the defense will each have the right to challenge one member of the distributor delegation or one of the exhibitor representation. When this occurs a member is automatically eliminated from the opposite side, thereby reducing the board from a 3-3 ratio in ordinary cases, to 2-2. In controversies of the extraordinary type, a challenge will reduce the board to three independent exhibitors, two distributors and one circuit representative.

Methods of Selecting Members

The theatre owners have not yet decided upon a method of selecting delegates. The national associates are expected to designate a panel, including alternates. The original draft of the plan, as drawn by Mr. Kent and a joint Allied-MPTOA committee, provided that, "In case the dispute arises in what is known as Allied territory, the representatives of the independent exhibitors shall be designated by Allied States Association, and in cases where the dispute arises in what is known as MPTOA terirtory, the representatives of the independent exhibitors shall be designated by the MPTOA."

When the dispute arises in so-called "neu-

RADIO CITY BEGINS CAREER:

Gorgeous Theatrics Mark Roxy's Radio City Debut

By TERRY RAMSAYE

As this week closes Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel again dashes forward on his career in a feat of Roman riding such as the world of amusement has never dreamed. With two pairs of reins in hand he rides with one foot on the Radio City Music Hall, devoted to vaudeville and spectacle, and under the other the RKO Roxy motion picture theatre, devoted to the art that destroyed vaudeville and supersedes the old forms of drama and spectacle.

Radio City Music Hall, architecturally the world's greatest and finest theatre, was opened Tuesday night with 6,200 members of who's who in New York out front and only slightly fewer members of who's which on stage and back. The theatre is so big that it took approximately 10,000 persons from 8 o'clock until forty-five minutes after midnight to get it open to Roxy's satisfaction. It may now be said to be open.

The chief significance of the Radio City Music Hall, at this stage, is as a blazing landmark of endeavor and attainment in endowing the theatre and its arts with beauty, grandeur and the utmost in the mechanisms and facilities which science has made available. Rockefeller money, Radio daring and Roxy concepts have set before America and the world an achievement in theatre construction which shall be history. In that the cause of the amusement industry is served, magnificently served.

The frame is glorious beyond comparison. The picture in that frame—as painted under the skyhigh proscenium Tuesday night—we shall be coming to that immediately.

The show in its nineteen interminable numbers can only be understood in terms of the showman, his amazing assurance, his equally amazing internal doubtings, his vaulting ambition, his dreams, his sympathy and his emotionalism. On a stage 80 by 144 feet in area, in four hours of program, he revealed it all.

Really Began in 1914

Roxy's big night had been on the way since that night of April 11, 1914 when he opened the Strand on Broadway and stood the audience up with a shot from Pathe News and "The Star Spangled Banner." He did it again Tuesday night, without the film.

In his Radio City show Roxy took the big beating heart of Babbitt America to his own and said it all, in a big, big way, including, so help me, "Dixie" and "Old Black Joe." He opened with a "Symphony of the Curtains," demonstrating and emphasizing the machinery of control which so fills him with delight. The curtain did tricks, great awesome tricks, while two organists on two great organs piped and pealed from their surprising niches in the vast arch cliffs. Big, big, big, the organs screamed, shouted, purred.

On came an ode of "Dedication" proclaimed by Mr. Robert T. Haines, made up in a big, big way as a Being, as old as Time and twice as authoritative. It was as close as Roxy could come to having his stage dedicated in person by the Almighty Himself. Then, as though in fear of the majesty of the idea, it was counterbalanced by a reciting clown in rouge and white with a narrative paean about the building of Radio City damnably illustrated and symbolized by a burst from steam jets rising in the play of such lights as never were seen this side of the Pearly Gates of Thence.

There was Roxy's obeisance to the high Art of choreography with Mr. Harald Kreutzberg in the role of the "Angel of Fate" supported by sundry other dancers, abstractly, oh so abstractly, depicting fun in a graveyard, lighted the while with a ghoulish arsenical green with the flavor of grass grown on the fringes of some decomposing hell. But not until into the morning did Art really hit its stride, when at Number 18, Martha Graham "and her dance group" broke loose and arted all over the stage in a "choric dance for an antique Greek tragedy" for a very long time.

A Show for the People

But Roxy took no chances with a curse of highbrowism. He had an antidote for that sufficient to cancel any charges from the upper end of the scale, when at Number 17, Doctor Rockwell, vaudeville monologist, equipped with scissors, bit by bit, cut away the skirt of a warbling diva and reached a delicate climax by taking a neat sample 2¼ by 3¾ inches in area, as we estimated it from the eighteenth row, from her short lace panties. Set in several million dollars worth of handmade heaven this act had all the fitness and charm of a dachshund pup having his way against the Empire State Building.

There was a day before the coming of the glory of now that Roxy looked with hungering eyes on the glamours of the Metropolitan and the exalted fame of Gatti-Casazza, Bodansky and the like, borrowing some of the aromas of operatic sanctity for the Rialto and Rivoli in the services of sundry ballet masters, set designers and the like. But now, in the great glorious now, opera is but an ante in the potpourri of the Music Hall. There's Fraulein Vera Schwarz from the Staats-Oper, Berlin, singing a lot of "Liebeswalzer" and

THE QUESTION THAT FACES

¶ Much was expected of Radio City Music Hall. Backed by the ample financial resources of the Rockefeller interests and inspired and guided by S. L. Rothafel, this elaborate venture in the amusement business was depended upon to establish new and greater standards. It was expected to typify the progress made in the building of better theatres.

¶ Radio City Music Hall does all of this. It is an extraordinary achievement in size, in beauty, in appointments and in equipment. Roxy's astute judgment, based on a long and thorough experience in buildings of popular amusement, gives a character and an advance to this new and extraordinary hall of entertainment.

¶ The real news relative to the new development is not, however, concerned with the building or with the environment created therein. There was no question of the outstanding excellence of these, before the inaugural evening and there can be none now. But there was question as to what was to be disclosed upon the stage and the opening performance leaves that question unanswered, or at least not satisfactorily answered.

¶ The opening program, in various of its units, rattled about piteously in the great and beautiful hall. Other units which were of dimensions corresponding to the vastness of the hall were bland, neutral and quite unim-

MUSIC HALL, ROXY OPEN

Theatres Are Designed and Equipped on Elaborate Scale

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

The two theatres of Radio City, opening as the first full-functioning units of the Radio Corporation's division of Rockefeller Center in New York, were revealed this week with all the glamor promised by the many months of publicity given them. They prove to be extraordinary theatres, one in sheer immensity, both in the elegance of their architecture and programs.

With a program that was ultimately cut down to more than four hours in length and exhaustively prepared by many geniuses of the theatre laboring under the supervision of Roxy (S. L. Rothafel), the most gorgeous of these theatres, Radio City Music Hall, disclosed to more than 6,000 people the type of entertainment to be presented there. The inaugural performance consisted in what some may call "glorified vaudeville," but its elements finally wrought out something more than that. The Music Hall show most resembles a revue, but it is offered in more serious vein, with emphasis on the semi-classical and spectacular. Few theatres — if, indeed, any — could quite accommodate its vast ensembles and prodigious theatrical effects, but for these very things the Music Hall has been specifically designed.

The stage, without being disproportionate, has a height at the proscenium opening of 60 feet. Several large ballet units, a couple of choruses, a galaxy of principals, sets, props, cyclorama and four horses failed to fill it Tuesday night. And perhaps as many as 200 performers were raised out of depths beneath it by the might of its lift equipment. Stage lighting, emanating from the auditorium projection room, from between the contour curtain and the proscenium arch and from the rigging loft, and produced under electronic control, probably challenged the ingenuity of even Leon Leonidoff and Robert Edmond Jones. The proscenium drop — the contour curtain — furls upward at almost any point along its vast breadth, dividing the stage, if desired, into one or more smaller stages. The technics of this stage are alone capable of providing quite a performance in themselves.

From the proscenium arch the auditorium bells out in lengthening arches, stepped for both architectural and acoustical reasons all the way back to three mezzanines deep in the rear. Pierced plaster bands form a strip pattern horizontally across the series of arches. They are illuminated from the rear, while the forward ones serve also as organ loft grilles. In this theatre there are two organs.

Mezzanines Displace Balconies

The Music Hall mezzanines have been designed on the same principle applied in the other Radio City theatre, the RKO Roxy. It has been desired to eliminate any overhanging balconies in order, it is said, to create a feeling of intimacy in the audience and to preclude the possibility of bad acoustical areas. The mezzanines are not only relatively shallow, but recede into an upper area to the rear of the main level.

The RKO Roxy, opening Thursday night as the motion picture theatre of Radio City, shows the application of similar principles in its auditorium. Just as the auditorium of the Music Hall does not flatten out to form a front wall opening in a proscenium arch, that of the Roxy ends with similar abruptness. Here, however, the stage opening is rectangular, with the walls slightly converging to flank it, and the front curtain following in a concave contour the curve of the ceiling. And, as we have seen, there are no balconies, but merely three shallow mezzanines.

The Roxy auditorium has walls entirely

there's none other than the great Titta Ruffo himself in excellent voice, together with some four excerpt acts from "Carmen." And what "Carmen"! Bizet at his busiest never dreamed such extended magnificence as Roxy's "Carmen" painted verily on a seven league canvas with brushes of comet's hair. As a series of stage pictures Roxy's "Carmen" is gorgeous, every now and then. Four acts of it, however, more than suffice, in the same sense that a man thirsty for a glass of water gets embarrassed at Lake Michigan. It's bigger, bigger, bigger.

Pleasant, sincere words should be set down for the vast orchestra so competently conducted by Erno Rapee,

But mainly bigness counted. Everything big that Roxy ever heard of, except maybe Niagara Falls and Kate Smith. He may get them yet, too.

It was 12:45 o'clock in the morning and great patches were opening up among the ermine drifts of the expanses of auditorium as the audience melted and trickled, when Roxy answered a call to the stage, thanked his staff and hit his time honored radio chord: "Good night— and God bless you."

What Roxy does, what he will have done, with the Radio City motion picture theatre, the RKO Roxy, as this issue of Motion Picture Herald reaches you, will mayhap be another story of showmanship— motion picture showmanship, which for America's millions is after all the only showmanship that matters.

MR. ROTHAFEL

By Martin Quigley

pressive. One or two items, notably the choir from the Tuskegee Institute, were impressive and seemed logically a part of what was to be expected in an enterprise of such pretentions. But the show generally was Roxy's old show from the original Roxy theatre — without the picture. And it is, of course, a matter of common knowledge in the trade that attendance at the old theatre fluctuated erratically, the determining factor being the varying appeal of the motion picture and in no way the stage show which it was possible largely to standardize as to quality and appeal.

¶ The problem as to attractions therefore remains as something to engage Roxy's manifold abilities during the succeeding months. If he is left principally reliant upon vaudeville, especially in its present decadent state, Roxy and his associates are likely to learn an expensive lesson on the point of the relative importance of a theatre building as compared with a theatre attraction. The whole history of the show business points to the dominance of the attraction, the hall, however adequate or inadequate it may happen to be, being of decidedly secondary importance.

¶ The situation then is that Roxy is now all dressed up with the greatest and finest in the history of the theatre; the question is will he be able to find somewhere to go with it.

ANTI-DUAL MOVEMENT REVERSED AS MANY DISREGARD BAN ON DOUBLES

Many Exhibitors Returning to Double Feature Policy Under Pressure of Weak Business; Elimination Pacts Discarded

The recently prevalent tendency pointing toward elimination of double feature showings at motion picture theatres has suddenly reversed, according to reports from various cities which indicate that many exhibitors, prompted by conditions, and, in many cases, by similar action of competitors, are swinging back to the old dual policy. Local bans are being disregarded in many territories. Kansas City, Detroit, Milwaukee, Racine, Boston, Memphis and St. Louis are among the cities where exhibitors are returning to double bills in order to bolster box office returns.

Only Chicago seems to be holding to an agreement committing owners to singles.

In Detroit, where Allied States Association has fought for three monthe to enforce the ban on dual features, the lid blew off a few days ago when seven prominent neighborhood houses returned to doubles. Several of the smaller houses had violated the agreement to ban duals almost from its inception. H. M. Richey, business manager of Allied in Michigan, admitted that the desire of a majority of exhibitors was for double features but reaffirmed the statement that the position of his association has been and always will be that double bills are unwise. "Consequently," Mr. Richey said, "the association is looking out of the window as far as the matter is concerned at present."

Only a short time ago, Racine revoked its cooperative agreement calling for single features. The change was largely due to the fact that Tom Norman brought back duals to the Uptown theatre. Now the Crown and Capitol are again showing doubles.

Double featuring difficulty hit Memphis this week. Loew's, Warner and RKO are participating.

Similarly the situation in downtown Milwaukee, which has been comparatively free from double bills, has changed. The Warner theatre has adopted a policy of doubles and two other theatres have given double features a trial.

In St. Louis, the Film Board of Trade has notified Radio-Keith-Orpheum that it is opposed to the double bill policy in force at the Missouri theatre. RKO, replying that the policy has been in force three years, ever since it was started by the Skouras brothers, informed the board that if it wants to operate the house the circuit will be glad to turn it over. Meanwhile, Publix has continued to show double features.

At a recent meeting in Baltimore of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, it was decided that each theatre owner will have to settle the questions of admissions and double features for himself. Herman A. Blum, president, informed members that the organization would be glad to help straighten out any problem involving competitive theatres.

Under the new local decentralized management of Publix theatres in New England, three Boston first run houses are changing from a single feature to a double feature policy. The important Fenway, Paramount and Uptown are all going to doubles and the Beacon theatre will continue as a second run double feature house. The Modern, which has been playing double features under a second run policy, is reported returning to singles.

In addresses delivered last week in Milwaukee before the Better Films Council and the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, deplored the "double feature nuisance."

Chicago theatres, according to Carl Lesserman, of Warners, are keeping their anti-double feature agreement with but a few unimportant exceptions. This city practiced the system for years, to a greater extent than elsewhere, until a sudden agreement was effected by all local owners several weeks ago.

Kansas City is another spot where double billing regulations self-imposed by exhibitors have fallen by the wayside through lack of observance by those who adopted them as a "constructive measure."

A "Code of Ethics" limiting twin bills to one a week and none on Sunday is being tacitly ignored by neighborhood houses. They embraced the pact several months ago but soon thereafter double billing cropped up again and the Independent Theatre Owners Association solemnly swore its members to stick by the "gentlemen's agreement." With a couple of exceptions, all agreed.

The agreement, reiterated and reaffirmed, was short-lived, and now the lid is off and the bars are down. Where a house has four changes a week, three are likely to be a double program. Houses charging from 15 to 25 cents run doubles on 10-cent nights, twice or more times a week. Double bills on Sunday have made their appearance at houses which hitherto scorned the practice. Two features and a program of shorts, or one feature and two shorts are apt to be billed as a "mammoth triple program."

The Independent Theatre Owners in Kansas City even went so far as to appoint a grievance committee with powers to investigate violations of the pact and report back to the membership for consideration. But this is seemingly useless, as no penalties are imposed and the association is powerless to enforce the agreement.

Generally, exhibitors give two reasons for failure of the various "gentlemen's agreements": Conditions and the fact that some exhibitors will not adhere to the regulations 100 per cent. Where an exhibitor is willing to stick to single features, his competition starts double billing, and the first exhibitor has to follow suit to keep business. At least that is the general excuse.

What the remedy is, exhibitors are not saying. In the meantime, catch-as-catch-can rules prevail.

Paramount Lists $5,206,887 Loss For 3rd Quarter

Paramount Publix Corp., in its consolidated statement, which includes subsidiary companies, reports a combined net loss, exclusive of capital losses which were charged to capital surplus, of $5,206,887 for the three months to October 1, 1932, after deducting interest, depreciation and all other charges and reserves. This compares with a loss of $8,199,544, reported for the three months ending July 2, 1932, and a profit of $1,252,000 for the third quarter of 1931.

During the period, a reserve was provided for depreciation of fixed assets amounting to $2,884,634, of which $2,659,634 was charged off and the balance of $225,000 was capitalized to film production cost.

The corporation proposes to provide reserves for revaluation of fixed assets as of April 3, 1932, which reserves will be charged against the capital surplus which was created by the stockholders in changing the common stock of the company from shares without par value to shares with par value of $10. When these reserves are placed on the books, there will be a saving in depreciation of approximately $750,000 for the three months to October 1, 1932, which adjustment will reduce the three months' loss to approximately $4,457,000.

McIntyre, Clarke Associate, Commits Suicide in New York

D. E. McIntyre, executive associate of Harley L. Clarke for some years, who committed suicide by jumping from an upper floor of the St. Moritz Hotel in New York last week, was buried this week in Boston. Mr. McIntyre handled the Fox studio on the Coast during the absence of Winfield Sheehan. His work with certain of the utilities enterprises of Mr. Clarke led to his being sent to Hollywood to study the production situation.

His recommendations for economy resulted in his taking over operation of the plant for about six months, after which he returned to New York. He is reported to have had no business affiliations at the time of his death. Mr. McIntyre had been suffering from an ailment in his neck for some time and Chicago physicians had suggested he return for treatment after the first of the year.

Is DeCasseres' Opinion of Play "Firebird"; Critic Takes Stock Of the Stage's Latest Output

by BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

FIREBIRD

Judith Anderson and Henry Stephenson (a corking team) pulled a well-bred crime thriller out of Lajos Zilahy's (Budapest) "Firebird." Why it is called "Firebird" I do not know.

As a stage play, it is rather dull and leaky, it all having been done once before by one Oscar Wilde in "Lady Windermere's Fan." But when the Mystery Squad of scenario pluggers in Hollywood and a hand-picked, high-bred cast who can move in ultra-swell Budapest circles squared off a fascinating picture can be made of this play for those who, like myself, would walk away from a Camille and walk a mile for a good crime story.

Here are the angles: In a swell apartment house an actor—matinee idol and a girl-tumbler—have been murdered.

In this house lives the owner, his wife and daughter. He is a mighty fellow in the councils of the Hungarian government. He (Henry Stephenson) tries to ferret out who did the job. He doesn't like actor-killing on his property.

He is unconsciously running down his wife (with the aid of the Police Commissioner). She finally confesses the crime. She was the actor's mistress and the latter threatened exposure. The Big Fellow is inexorable. His wife must face the music.

But the Police Commissioner (Montagu Love) suddenly says Tush! and Bull! He has witnesses that she (Judith Anderson) was out of the house during the hour the crime was committed. Here is a tense and exciting second act. We all remain mentally cock-eyed in our seats guessing who killed the actor. Percy Hammond said it was Lee Shubert. I guessed Sam Goldwyn.

Well, Mates, it was the daughter, whom we only saw once for a moment in the prologue. She was having an affair with her Clark Gable when in a dispute the gun (there's always a gun) went off. And the mother tried to take the blame. But the girl goes off to jail—and is probably adjudged not guilty and buried in flowers for killing another ham.

SINGAPORE

This play by Robert Keith contains conventional, and therefore, generally profitable, picture material. It is for those who like to take their East hot off the passion-griddle.

We'll take you somewhere east of Suez where a man can raise a thirst, where there "ain't" no Ten Commandments and a director can do his worst—and still click at the box-office.

Eric Hope is a young Englishman who works for a big-time Sultan. Eric has a bungalow in Singapore. He had also in his bungalow Malaya, a pretty half-breed girl (played with a ravishing It-noose by Suzanne Caubaye). Naturally, Eric and Malaya are—yes, just as you thought.

Now, the gasp-and-pop-eye angle (called the Creeping Menace in old Fort Lee days) gets working when Eric's bride comes out from England. Malaya naturally becomes active. Her meal ticket is sinking into a Depression.

So—Malaya by peeping here and listening there discovers that something is a-doin' between Eric's bride and the Sultan. She even hears the bride say she'd like to see hubby bumped off so she could become La Sultana and wear the big "jools."

So the Sultan brings his cobras to court with a gang of goona-goona dancing wenches (grand old picture stuff now begins to jell) and while the revels are at their flurriest the Sultan has one of the cobras sting the wife to death.

Well, it won't need a Rupert Hughes to make a picture of this, anyhow.

THE PERFECT MARRIAGE

Should old married people spill the beans to one another about what happened when they were newly married and the flood was still beyond the control of Will Hays' Commandments?

That is the theme of Arthur Goodrich's new play, "The Perfect Marriage." A chateau in Auvergne, France. A famous aged playwright and his wife are about to celebrate their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They have had a peaceful time of it. The President of France and other bourgeoises send their congrats. They bill and coo like two old people will.

But in pops the Devil—Miss Fay Bainter. She had been the playwright's secretary in years agone and she knows where the bodies of both the husband's and wife's early infidelities are buried. In fact, she herself is the old man's sin.

We fade back forty-five years (grand transformation of all actors and actresses) and we see just how the two old happy people cheated on one another. An old fellow in the first act was the wife's boy friend.

Back to the anniversary celebration—the cat is out of the family bag. Great swearing and wringing of hands and threats. But all's well that ends Broadway. Clever.

AUTUMN CROCUS

With the success of "Music in the Air" and "Autumn Crocus" (by C. L. Anthony) we may expect a craze for the bucolic, the pastoral, the yodeler, Tyrolean troubadours and romances in mountain moonlight. Away with goona-goona and Bali. Comes now the Alps!

"Autumn Crocus" contains a picture, a pretty picture, a sweet picture. It is laid in the Tyrol. There is an inn. Ruling this inn is the latest New York sensation, Francis Lederer. He's an English actor and he's got Clark Gable, John Gilbert, John Barrymore, Clive Brook and all the rest laid out flat so far as the girls go. They say six picture producing companies have already opened their safes to Francis.

The story: An English Lady in Spectacles (Patricia Collinge) falls in love with the inn-keeper. They meet on a mountainside where the Englishwoman is willing to take a plunge into sex-life. But he informs her that he has a wife. She nearly falls down the mountain. But, still, afterward, she thinks she'll take a dip into what every woman should know. But now her old-maid friend warns her that familiarity breeds babies. Ouch!

Well, nothing happens. The Tyroleans sing, the harpist plays his harp and the English lady goes away.

There are other side issues, somewhat comic, in the inn. The public is strong for the play—and there are many good picture angles in it. And there are so many idle Alps sets at present in Hollywood!

DEAR JANE

When crime begins to wane, when we get fed up on lounge-pawing and when the Marx Brothers and Schnozzle have banked twelve millions for their picture getaway, then, maybe, some director will turn yearningly toward something soft, dreamy, old-fashioned, with minuets, moonlight, eighteenth-century gurgles and giggles, Sam Johnson, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Davy Garrick, Jimmy Boswell—and the Battle of Trafalgar done in the old tank (long shot).

He can find all this in "Dear Jane," the first new production of Eva Le Gallienne's Civic Repertory Company. It concerns love episodes in the life of Jane Austen, famous English novelist.

Jane (played delightfully and without a trace of psychological stuffing by Josephine Hutchinson) giggles and flirts and jilts three lovers. The third is a Nelson hero (1798), and as he is about to marry Jane she quits his castle to resume the production of book-worm fodder.

Joseph Schildkraut stalks through "Dear Jane," in which the motion picture angles are dependent on a change in film styles. For my part, I'm thirsty to see some old-time screen romance as clean as a Methodist angel.

26 BOOKS AND PLAYS PURCHASED; HOLLYWOOD SEEKS STORY SOURCES

Nine Producers Buy Material During November; Total Less Than October; Paramount, Fox Lead with Six Purchases

All Companies Bought 184 Books, Plays Since March When Season Began; Seeking New Source of Material

Nine producers concluded negotiations during November for motion picture rights to 26 books and plays. Paramount and Fox each bought six; Metro acquired four; Radio and Warners took three each. Columbia, Fanchon Royer, Reliance and Universal each bought one.

Story buys during November were slightly fewer than in October when producers negotiated rights to 28. Since March 1, which marked the real beginning of story activities for current season production, independent producers and large companies, combined, bought 184 books and plays.

New types of stories for pictures and the cultivation of additional sources of material are problems which are currently occupying the attention of Hollywood as never before. The pointed suggestion that plays stress realism too greatly and do not realize the value of a return to idealism was voiced by Actors' Equity, which argues that people must be "desperately tired of stories of disaster, of faithlessness, of sordid characters and evil deeds." Equity is "convinced that this is a strategic point and a favorable moment to shift the emphasis" in plots. How fast and far the swing may travel in the other direction "may safely be left to the general temper of the time," Equity said, "but to the first dramatists and producers who strike the right note there will go both profit and honor."

Meanwhile William LeBaron, producing executive, said in Hollywood that newspapermen are finding a warm welcome at the studios. "With the stage and book-publishers able to provide only a small percentage of the vehicles necessary to meet the ever-increasing picture output, the producers," he said, "must look to the men and women who write the daily newspapers of America."

Before returning to Hollywood, Mervyn LeRoy, director, said in New York that today the story transcends the director, star, players and technical staging.

A word of advice to writers was passed on by Frederick Melcher, editor of Publishers' Weekly, who said last week that by writing books that children like to read, an author can best make certain of being remembered. He cited Mark Twain and other popular stories. However, few of these have ever been successfully produced in celluloid.

An analysis of the stories and plays purchased during November for motion picture production discloses many well-known authors represented, including I. A. R. Wylie, Theodore Dreiser, Gene Fowler, Noel Coward, Ann Bridge, Eric Noel, Zane Grey, and others. A complete list of the November purchases follows:

Rosalie Stewart, stage producer, succeeded Kenneth Macgowan as scenario editor. Keene Thompson was assigned to write an original and Bob Tasker will collaborate with Fulton Oursler on adapting "Great Jasper."

Universal

Arthur Brilant was signed to prepare the scenario of "Suicide Club." Other assignments were Philip McKee, to adapt "Black and White Clown"; George Green, on "Out on Parole"; Don Ryan, on "Black Pearl," and William Harburt to dialogue "Only Yesterday."

CENSORSHIP—A BOX OFFICE FACTOR

Regulation, Whether Statutory Or Informal, Affects the Box Office and Industry's Income

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

It is a common statement among film people—production, distribution and exhibition—that the right answer is the box office answer. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences may present awards for artistic achievement, clubs and societies may vote this picture or that highly commendable. Resolutions, or threats, may be issued against gangster films, sex films. Humane societies may object to western pictures because, they say, horses are sometimes injured in wild riding episodes. But, says the industry, what does the picture do at the box office? Only there, it holds, may the great mass of the public voice its approval or disapproval.

There are some authorities who differ emphatically with those who hold for the box office standard of measurement in motion picture entertainment. There are those who hold that the purveyors of such entertainment, in any of its branches, have a moral responsibility to the public, to the wide world, in the matter of film presentations. Speaking for the industry, Will Hays has acknowledged that responsibility on numerous occasions ever since he became affiliated with the motion picture. The adoption of a code of regulation regarding subjects and their treatment in films by the producers themselves is an admission that such a responsibility exists.

Nevertheless, and more especially in these difficult days when picture theatre attendance has hit an all-time low, the box office standard is quoted by many leaders as the only important one. Pictures must be made for a profit, or the picture business will cease to exist, they properly declare. We cannot make artistic successes and commercial failures. We cannot produce films for the edification and approval of certain classes, if the masses will not support them. We must make pictures that the public will pay for.

Public Opinion Important

Looking at the matter, then, from purely a "box office" angle, let us see whether or not the moral responsibility is definitely related to the dollars-and-cents problem of the producer and exhibitor. For the moment let us forget about artistic ambitions, ethics, religious views, personal codes or any other standard of judgment for motion pictures. What is the box office reaction if pictures step beyond the commonly accepted limits set, for example, by the producers in their own Code of Production Ethics?

It is a favorite saying of Will Hays that "every one in America has two businesses—his own and the motion picture business." By that he means, of course, that the universality of motion picture entertainment is such that almost every person who has reached the age of reason forms some personal opinions about pictures, or, if not opinions, at least personal tastes. So far as millions of people are concerned, these views are either not expressed at all, or are expressed within a very small group of personal associates. It is the word-of-mouth expression which so often affects attendance at a given picture, favorably or adversely. Obviously, therefore, it is a box office factor, even though it is difficult to actually analyze and compile statistically.

But there is a channel of expressed public opinion which can be measured with considerable accuracy, and that is the censorship, statutory or informal, which is placed upon motion picture entertainment, the potency and extent of which is sometimes misunderstood or lost sight of by people within the industry. Whether we approve of it or not, the motion picture business is a regulated business, regulated by the public or their constituted agencies. It faces regulations affecting its income just as definitely as do the railroads through the Interstate Commerce Commission, or big business through the Sherman Act, or radio broadcasting through the Federal Radio Commission.

Every Film Must Run Gantlet

It is estimated that the population of this country which provides 60 per cent of the revenue earned by the average picture has set up mandatory regulations governing motion pictures in one form or another. Now this is a cold, passionless box office fact. Whether these regulations are old fashioned, prejudiced, unjustified, un-American, Victorian, archaic, blue-nosed or the "will of the minority," the fact remains that every motion picture which comes out of Hollywood must run the gantlet of some sort of censorship before it reaches the public. It should be obvious, therefore, to any thinking person, that a film which is objectionable to any considerable portion of this regulated territory is going to be adversely affected as to box office returns. Even though the liberal application of scissors to the film eliminates objectionable episodes or dialogue, it is likely that such elimination will so emaciate the quality of the whole picture that people who see the revised versions will be disappointed and thus become more or less alienated or indifferent toward motion picture entertainment. Imagine, if you will, a book reader purchasing a novel or borrowing one from the library, only to discover that whole paragraphs, or even whole chapters, had been clipped from the book by the librarian or the bookseller! Would there be a yell?

Unfortunately, in the case of the motion picture, it is difficult, if not impossible, for the layman, the average picture goer, to tell whether or not sequences and dialogue have been eliminated before he sees a picture. All he knows is that the picture is jumpy, or that things happen or are said without relation to something else in the story, or that characters do things without any apparent rhyme or reason. He goes out with a feeling of dissatisfaction, with his expressed or inarticulate criticism aimed at the producer who made such a senseless picture. And possibly the next time he contemplates going to the "movies" he turns on the radio instead, stays at home.

Eight great states, among them some of the largest in the union, have official state censoring agencies. With the exception of one, Florida, they all are functioning actively. The two most populous states in the nation are included: New York and Pennsylvania. A substantial loss of box office revenue from a motion picture in these two states alone spells the difference between a profit and a loss to the producer. Add to these the other states—Kansas, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia and Massachusetts—and it is immediately evident that the restrictions of state censorship alone have a potentially vital bearing upon the box office results.

A motion picture which is banned wholly, or in any considerable portion, in these states, or even some of them, is seriously crippled at the box office so far as the producer is concerned. Furthermore, exhibitors must consequently be more or less affected by censorship deletions which materially alter the original version and in most cases lower its value as entertainment. Saw a leg off a chair and you still can sit on it, but it isn't very satisfactory. Same way with a picture which has been chopped up in a cutting room.

Local Boards in Many Cities

Statutory censorship does not end with the aforementioned states. There are approximately 267 municipal boards of censorship in these United States in addition to the state boards. And they include some of our largest key cities, where first run revenue is important. Chicago, Atlanta, Birmingham, Ala.; Denver, Boston, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Detroit, Portland, Ore.; Springfield, Ill.; Evanston, Ill.; Kansas City, Mo.; Pasadena, Calif.; Dallas and Houston, Texas; Memphis, Madison, Wis.; Oklahoma City, Glendale, Calif.; Palo Alto, Calif.; Seattle, New Orleans, Sacramento—these are among the many larger centers of population which have set up local boards which must pass upon the moral and ethical merits of every production before it may be exhibited. Eliminate the box office returns, or cripple them, from several of these centers, and again the "box office" of a production has been substantially affected. Here again the point should be emphasized that a picture may be so revised, such cuts made, that a permit to exhibit is obtained, but the strength of the original attraction has been more or less sapped, and what is left is more likely to resemble buttermilk than cream, so far as its entertainment value is concerned. And the public, not knowing or caring, probably, what their duly appointed censors have done, thumb their noses at the picture as poor or indifferent product from the studios of Hollywood, losing their taste

UFA AND TOBIS UPHOLD GERMANY'S FILM BUSINESS IN TIME OF TRIAL

Ufa's Profit of $6,960,000 in Fiscal Year Presents Contrast to Experiences of Emelka, DLS and Südfilm Companies

by HANS TINTNER
Berlin Correspondent

UFA's financial statement showing a profit of $6,960,000 for the fiscal year ended May 31 must be considered imposing, in view of the general business situation in the motion picture market of Germany.

Ufa and Tobis today are the supports of the German film business against developments which in the last few weeks have seen the announcement of insolvency of several companies which for many a year had the best financial standing in the European film industry, such as Emelka, DLS and Südfilm.

The Emelka was the representative film company of Southern Germany, with Munich as headquarters. Splendid studios, a considerable theatre circuit and a progressive production policy were assets of this company. Many a fight was carried on for its control; even the Reich was once interested in it. Finally the majority passed into French financial circles and recently it was rumored that the radical German Hitlerites tried to get the leadership.

The DLS was the syndicate of German exhibitors. The sale of product was largely secured by the exhibitors united in the syndicate.

But here, as in the case of the Südfilm, the economic situation and the pronouncedly faulty investment have finally led to insolvency.

Political Background

The Ufa statement, however, is in decided contrast and its astounding assets must not be overlooked. A comparison with other industries, in which likewise can be observed the development and concentration of the most efficient groups as well as the decline and dissolution of the weak individuals, is not sufficient for a clear understanding of the Ufa announcement.

To appreciate the unrivaled superiority of the Ufa it is necessary to consider the details which have distinguished this company for many a year from the rest of the industry.

The Ufa sound news, to define it with the terminology of the newspapers, is a semi-official information bureau. The offices of this large organization could be called the German Film Ministry, although not officially so. There is an extremely close understanding between German governmental circles and the Ufa, and the mutual contacts are numerous. Whereas in other countries even the most powerful film company will exclusively concentrate its product to the greatest possible profit, the Ufa is taking other viewpoints into consideration so that a separation of its production policy from political background scarcely is possible.

In 1931-1932 Ufa produced 19 German pictures, 11 films in a foreign language, 21 German cultural films, 21 cultural films in a foreign language, 11 shorts, 179 issues of sound news and 149 educational and advertising films.

Some time ago the Ufa started production of a special edition of its weekly sound news for foreign countries. The activity of the Ufa studios at Tempelhof and at Neubabelsberg was satisfactory. In 1931-32 the studios were occupied for two-thirds of the time available. In 1930-31 this figure amounted to 83 per cent and it was 64 per cent in 1929-30. It was easily possible for the Ufa to realize a considerably higher percentage of employment in its studios but the company did not intend to follow the credit policy of the other Berlin studios.

It is frankly admitted that the credit granted from the various studios to the film producers has frequently made the proprietor of the studio an involuntary partner of the producer.

The same reasons led to a 25 per cent decline of the turnover of the Afifa, the editing company of the Ufa.

Controls 100 Theatres

The Ufa controls mare than 100 theatres with a seating capacity of 103,219. In 1931-32 these theatres registered 30,700,000 attendance, compared with 29,300,000 in 1930-31 period. By a reduction of admission prices the income of the theatres declined by 10 per cent in spite of the augmentation of patronage.

In the last season the Ufa has acquired 14 new houses, two from the Emelka, one with 2,175 seats in Munich, and the other, seating 1,043, at Nuremberg.

The Ufa has 73 branch offices, among them the Ufa ton Verlag, manufacturing and selling Ufa records. The daily sales of this subsidiary amount to 6,000 records.

Ufa has 14 branches in foreign countries which in 1931-32 reported an income of 11,000,000 reichsmarks, an increase of 50 per cent. The whole German film export business of 1931-32 is given as 20 million reichsmarks, Ufa being represented with half this figure.

The net profit of the Ufa in 1931-32 amounts to 2,019,583.77 reichsmarks compared with 3,002,934.17 in the same period of the preceding year. No less than 14,333,336.98 marks will be carried forward for the next season.

The film holdings of the Ufa consist of 1,680 feature films and 731 educationals.

The close cooperation of the Ufa with Gaumont-British in England, and the recently signed agreement with France which in reality is for an unlimited, mutual exchange of product, are expanding the Ufa's international activities.

Skouras Returning to Coast

Spyros Skouras, theatre operator, leaves New York for the Coast some time in January to continue the survey of Fox West Coast theatres which was interrupted by a recent visit to New York. An option for renewal of operation of the circuit is due on February 10, which it is understood will be exercised.

National Board Lists Best Films

For the first time, the National Board of Review, through its Committee on Exceptional Photoplays, has chosen the one best film out of all American pictures produced during the year. The choice for 1932 is "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," Warner Bros.

The National Board also announced its selection of the ten best American and the ten best foreign pictures for 1932. "The past year," the board stated, "while providing many pictures of excellence from an entertainment standpoint, has not offered many films as outstanding contributions to the art of the cinema. Therefore its list of the ten 'best' includes some that can accurately be called 'best' only in comparison with the rest of the year's output, because they are good examples of their type. The list of the ten best foreign films, outside of some that are outstandingly important, is presented on the same comparative basis," it is said. The titles of the pictures are listed alphabetically:

AMERICAN

"As You Desire Me," "A Bill of Divorcement," "A Farewell to Arms," "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," "Madame Racketeer," "Payment Deferred," "Scarface," "Tarzan," "Trouble in Paradise," "Two Seconds."

FOREIGN

"A Nous La Liberte," "Der Andere," "The Battle of Gallipoli," "Golden Mountains," "Kameradschaft," "Mädchen in Uniform," "Der Raub," "Der Mona Lisa," "Reserved for Ladies," "The Road to Life," "Zwei Menschen."

Roxy To Retain Name for Radio City Picture House

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel last week was granted permission by Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey to use the name Roxy for the new motion picture theatre in Radio City, New York. This decision, concluding a long drawn out court battle, means that the Seventh avenue house must find another name. At the same time, Judge Caffey confirmed the recommendation of Addison S. Pratt, special master who reviewed the case, that the use of the trademark, "Roxy Theatres Corporation," could not be taken from the old Roxy theatre group.

"As I see it," the court ruled, "a cancellation contract dated January 27, 1931, wholly terminated the right of the defendant to call its theatre the Roxy, save only as specified in the cancellation contract itself for the period from March 29, 1931, when the resignation of Mr. Rothafel as manager of the theatre became effective, and September 11 of this year, when the period of grace ended." Howard S. Cullman, receiver of the Roxy Theatres Corporation, stated that he had advised counsel to appeal from the decision.

BERLIN AMERICANIZES ITS EXPLOITATION. To those used to Yankee ballyhoo methods, there's nothing unusual in the erection of a large electric sign to exploit a picture. But in Germany such costly and flamboyant media are noteworthy, and so we show what was done in Berlin to advertise the showing of Paramount's latest Harold Lloyd comedy, "Movie Crazy." This sign is located on the famous Potsdamer Platz in Berlin.

THEATRES OF RADIO CITY OPENED. With the initial performances this week at the Music Hall and RKO Roxy, Radio City in the Rockefeller Center development in New York was placed in operation. These two theatres, pictured above, are capable of supplying entertainment to more than 9,600 persons at the same time. The Music Hall, devoted to vaudeville, light opera and extravaganza, seats over 6,000, while the RKO Roxy, presenting motion pictures and stage features, has a capacity of approximately 3,600. Both houses are of modern architecture and decoration. The motion picture theatre employs no proscenium in its architectural scheme, and the walls are of wood. The Music Hall auditorium is in an arch pattern.

of wood, consisting of mahogany panels divided by strips of contrasting shade and grain. Adjacent to the stage opening are tiers of grills, illuminated from the rear and admitting the tones of the organ pipes. The ceiling is of plaster molded in a pattern and dominated decoratively by an immense chandelier. Piercing the ceiling are apertures behind which are located small spotlights, which supply the major portion of the house illumination. The Roxy seats approximately 3,600.

The Roxy's opening program is characteristic of the policy to be followed. The theatre has a large symphony orchestra for overtures and incidental music, and a resident ballet. Around these are built a stage program of dancing, musical and comic acts booked in. The opening screen program consisted of a newsreel which followed the dedication overture, augmented by a dance feature, and RKO Radio's "The Animal Kingdom," which was given the final spot. This performance was the premiere of that production.

The opening Music Hall program offered, in addition to numbers by the orchestra and resident ballet and chorus, Taylor Holmes in a musical dramatic sketch, aerialists, comedy by Sisters of the Skillet, Doctor Rockwell and H. Ray Bolger; Fraulein Vera Schwarz of the Berlin Opera, the Tuskegee choir, an allegorical dance by Harald Kreutzberg, excerpts from "Carmen" featuring Titta Ruffo, Coe Glade, Aroldo Lindi and Patric Bowman, the Martha Graham dancers, Weber & Fields and a concluding minstrel number with De Wolf Hopper acting as a master of ceremonies.

Among those present at the Music Hall opening, which was conducted on a more elaborate scale than that of the RKO Roxy, were John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Nelson Rockefeller, Owen D. Young, M. H. Aylesworth, David Sarnoff, Gen. James G. Harbord, Walter P. Chrysler, the acting mayor and mayor-elect of New York, Will H. Hays, Adolph Zukor, Jules Brulatour, Hope Hampton, Dr. A. H. Giannini, Major Edward Bowes, Eugene Zukor and innumerable others representing the financial and social as well as the theatrical worlds.

Personnel of the Radio City theatre staffs, which are the same for both houses, is as follows:

Leon Leonidoff, director of production; Robert Edmond Jones, general art director; Erno Rapee, general musical director; Charles Previn, Macklin Marrow and Joseph Littau, associate conductors of the theatres' orchestras.

Staff organists—Dick Liebert, Arthur Gutow, O. A. J. Parmentier and Betty Gould.

James Reynolds, associate art director; Florence Rogge, ballet director; Desire Defrere, opera director; Lasar Galpern, associate ballet master; Russell Markert, director of Roxyettes; Leon Rosebrook, director of chorus; Leo Russotto, in charge of radio programs; William Stern, stage manager; Eugene Braun, electrical engineer; Harry Hiller, chief sound engineer; Arthur Smith, chief projectionist; Hattie Rogge, in charge of costumes.

James H. Turner, chief of administration; Charles W. Griswold, manager of theatres; Martha W. Wilchinski, director of publicity; S. Jay Kaufman, assistant to Roxy; Leah Klar, secretary to Roxy; David P. Canavan, in charge of maintenance; Anne Beckerle, R. N., supervisor of Radio City hospitals.

The openings were broadcast over NBC hookups.

Censorship Called Box Office Factor

for motion picture entertainment. Thus the censored picture may not be vitally affected, but every subsequent attraction for some time is likely to feel the effect in declining weekly box office grosses through indifference upon the part of potential patrons.

Here in America, however, there is still another important angle of censorship, too often "poo-poohed" by some picture makers. It is the gratuitous or unofficial censorship of a large group of organizations and individuals who either control or partially affect the entertainment selections made by millions of people. Call them meddlers, bigots, parlor agitators or whatever you like, the fact remains that they are drops in the bucket, that they make up the ranks of those who have two businesses, "their own and the film business." Directly or indirectly, they have a bearing upon the box office receipts.

And we should not forget that in addition to those whose interest and efforts are most sincere and honest, there are hordes of political fakirs and front-page publicity seekers who are smart enough to realize and use the possibilities of slinging mud at the "movies" to further their own selfish ends. They get and deserve only our contempt, but they exist, and from a purely box office business angle, we cannot ignore their existence.

Powers Continues BIP Agreement

Gabriel Hess, MPPDA, Testifies in Quittner Suit

tral" territory, or in territory in which there is both an Allied and an MPTOA unit, the independent exhibitor or exhibitor parties to the dispute shall have the right to choose the independent representatives from panels designated individually by Allied and MPTOA.

Distributors likewise will select a panel in New York. This will rotate continuously in order to fulfill the plan's stipulation that no distributor may have a sales manager sitting on the board in cases to which the distributor is a party.

A member of such board, before taking his seat, shall subscribe to an obligation, in a form to be agreed upon, to do full justice in every case on the facts presented, regardless of former associations, friendships or declarations.

The board in every case shall have and consider all relevant facts relating to the dispute. For example, in disputes growing out of protection, the size and location of the theatres involved, their admission prices and operating policy, the feature of the program emphasized (whether pictures or vaudeville), the film rentals paid, the receipts, advertising, type of neighborhood and patrons, and all other circumstances bearing on the competitive situation and the extent to which they can or do draw patronage one from another. The board, however, shall have the right to exclude all irrelevent evidence having no bearing on the issues and tending to delay.

In the submission of disputes to the national appeal board "every effort shall be made to constitute such submission a legal and binding arbitration, so far as the law will permit; and the agreement of the parties to accept the decision of the board as a binding award shall be a condition precedent to the right of any disputant to invoke its jurisdiction," according to the pact.

In case the board's decision is evenly divided in any case, it will be necessary to call in a ninth or fifth member, as the case may be, and such odd member shall be the unanimous choice of the representatives sitting in the particular case. Failing unanimous agreement on such odd member, the same shall, upon request of the board, be designated by the Governor of the State of New York, or other official or agency unanimously agreed upon.

The important obstacle to adoption of the appeals board revolved around situations where affiliated circuit interests, not fully controlled by the distributor, did not adopt the program. Obviously, this would leave the independents in the territory which is dominated by the affiliated circuit without any redress because these circuits would not be compelled to arbitrate. The method of settling disputes which might arise out of such situations, and which would involve protection, principally, is for a local committee to meet with the dominant circuit to work out a protection schedule favorable to all. Then, if this is not successful, the question would be submitted to the national appeals board sitting as a conciliatory body. If the board is unable to affect a settlement its members may then "recommend" changes to the offending affiliated circuit.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

In an exhausting (and how) interview with Mike Simmons, who signs his name with a Monogram, we learned that the film world is destined to wake up tomorrow only to discover that "Monogram Has the Right Idea." "This asserveration is not merely a declarative sentence," declared Monogram's minnesinger, who is more popularly known around Times Square as "Six-Syllable Simmons." "It is a trade axiom, a committal of faith, a symbol of truth as bald as the mosque of Ophir."

When pressed for further details, Monogram's lexicographer screwed a monocle tightly in the frame of his eyebrow, a stunt which he learned while editing a British picture, and avowed hotly: "Wherever I go, and I certainly do go places these days, as my batch of due bills will show, I am constantly reminded by discerning members of this industry that Monogram has the right idea." (Note, Mr. Simmons is also a press agent.)

"I said to Ray Johnston, our president," he continued, "that these people can't be wrong. Who are we to say 'neigh'" (Monogram will soon release "Black Beauty").

"'All right,' Mr. Johnson sighed, 'just to preclude any further titillating witticisms of that sort, have it your own way,' and so, beginning tomorrow, the company's official slogan will be, 'Monogram Has the Right Idea!'"

The "red terror" has struck the picture business. When word of the incident reached main street there immediately developed a rumor about a march of a "red army" into town. The Vacaville theatre's night shows are light.

When death suddenly overtook Abraham E. Lefcourt, on November 13, it interrupted the career of what might have been a great power in motion pictures. Mr. Lefcourt was a close friend of Joseph M. Schenck. He had always nurtured an ambition to enter films. This desire was realized one day last summer when he launched an independent concern to produce and distribute as a means of recouping an enormous fortune which he had lost in New York real estate during the depression. In 1928, Mr. Lefcourt's realty holdings were estimated to be worth $100,000,000. His building program in that year represented an investment of $50,000,000. He built 20 skyscrapers in or near the film sector of Times Square. Mr. Lefcourt's will, filed for probate last week, disclosed an estate worth $2,500.

Majestic Meets On New Budget

Territorial franchise holders and executives of Majestic Pictures will meet in New York Thursday to decide upon increased negative costs on the remaining 14 features of the 1932-33 schedule. Five pictures of the 20 scheduled are already completed and one other is in production.

Herman Gluckman, president, will preside at the meeting which will be attended by William D. Shapiro, vice-president, of Boston; B. N. Judell, second vice-president; Phil Goldstone, treasurer, in charge of production; Eddie Eschmann, distribution executive at the home office, and the following franchise holders: Anthony Luchese, Philadelphia and Washington; J. H. Mills, Albany; Nat Levine, Seattle, and Oscar Hanson, Toronto.

Decision has already been made to increase costs of future pictures; the convention will merely decide to what extent. Following the meeting, Mr. Gluckman, who also operates Capital Film Exchange in New York, will hold open house in his new offices on the tenth floor of the Film Center Building, at 630 9th Avenue.

Majestic this week signed Paul Lukas and Leila Hyams for "Sing You Sinner," a play by Wilson Collison and adapted by Edward T. Lowe, which Frank Strayer will direct. Next on the company's production schedule will be "The Public Be Damned," co-featuring Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings, with Irving Cummings directing.

Herman Gluckman has purchased territorial rights to Nat Levine's single reeler, "Technocracy." Tony Luchese purchased the reel for Philadelphia and Joe Simmonds, for the coast.

CHINESE ENJOYING FOREIGN "TALKERS"

The total of theatres and consequent total of seating capacity in the motion picture houses of China has more than doubled within the past five years, according to a recent news dispatch from Peiping, China. One leading American exchange is reported to have indicated that of the 34 countries in which it operates, the greatest increase in business was in China during a five months' period. In 1927, following 20 years of motion pictures in China, 106 theatres had a seating capacity of 68,000. The last census shows an increase to 233 houses and a combined seating total of 137,000. The ratio of seats to the total Chinese population is pointed out as still very low, but an indication for the future is noted. Americans and Europeans in Chinese cities are reported amazed at the manner in which the native Chinese, knowing only their own language, attend and apparently enjoy the films in English or German. American films still remain the most popular. In Shanghai several studios are currently producing talking pictures in the native Chinese. These are said to be very well received.

The shaded bars represent the business done in the same cities during the corresponding period in 1931.

PLAN NEW SYSTEM FOR SELLING TALKER RIGHTS

New Policy Being Considered Would Alter Payment Basis to Film "Arbiter" Who Handles Sales of Stage Productions

A new plan is understood to be under consideration which would alter the basis of payment to the so-called motion picture "arbiter," who, through a tieup with the Dramatists' Guild, negotiates the sale of motion picture rights to Broadway stage productions. A change in the rate to be paid the arbiter is included in the new plan. Screen rights to plays are said to cost the industry about $1,000,000 yearly.

Joseph P. Bickerton, Jr., an attorney who has also been a producer, has been the arbiter for the past six years. According to the original agreement he has been entitled to 3½ per cent of the sums paid by picture producers for the rights to Broadway plays. Fees other than those provided in this agreement have not been mentioned, although it is understood that the Dramatists' Guild has specified that any surplus should be disposed of by a two-thirds vote of that organization.

The proposed plan follows a request of Herman Shumlin, New York theatrical producer, for a report of the plays sold to film companies through Mr. Bickerton and financial returns derived therefrom. The request was refused by Mr. Bickerton who did, however, turn in the report to the counsel for the Guild. That group in turn referred the matter to the committee, consisting of Warren Monsell and Brock Pemberton, who had represented the managers in drawing up the current basic agreement.

Dr. Henry Mockowitz, director of the New York Theatre League which includes most of the leading producing managers, has been asked by this committee to call a meeting of the League. It is understood that some action will be taken within a week, after which the League can then meet with the Dramatists' Guild and take final steps in revising the arbiter's payment plan.

The estimate made by Mr. Bickerton of sales for the past four years shows a total of $4,000,000, which would place his income at $25,000 annually.

In discussing the situation, Mr. Pemberton pointed out that there have been a number of complaints regarding the work and income of the arbiter. The office was originally established to act as a safeguard for authors, but, Mr. Pemberton said, the arbiter did not participate in all sales. Moreover, Mr. Bickerton has recently re-entered the theatrical producing field, which is in violation of the original agreement.

Although Mr. Pemberton did not know of any specific proposals that had been made, he thought it likely that the percentage of sale price would be lowered and a maximum sum to be earned in any year established.

George Kann Leaves MGM

George Kann, representative of the foreign department at the MGM Coast studio, resigned last week. No successor has been appointed as yet. The future plans of Mr. Kann are indefinite.

MPPDA Board Meets

The regular quarterly board of directors meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., was held in New York last Friday.

Film Society Is Formed to Study Unusual Pictures

The Film Society, Inc., an organization for the exhibition of motion pictures which cannot be shown commercially because of lack of box office appeal or because of censorship, to a private membership, has been formed in New York. Distinguished names are included in the published list of sponsors.

It is planned to offer 10 Sunday evening performances throughout the year, with the exception of July and August. The membership will be limited to 500, each person being required to pay dues of $12 per year. The organization will not be conducted for profit, according to Julien Levy, president. The directors include Iris Barry, James Shelley Hamilton, Henry Hart, Lincoln Kirstein, Mr. Levy, Dwight MacDonald, Harry Alan Potamkin, Critchell Rimington, R. De Roussy De Sales, Irvin Shapiro, Louis Simon, John A. Thomas. Morris L. Ernst is counsel. Offices are at 602 Madison avenue.

In the course of the announcement Mr. Levy said: "There are many films of both foreign and domestic origin which never even reach the little playhouses because they appeal, in their subject matter or technique, to a limited audience, or because the censor forbids their exhibition. We believe there are 500 persons in New York so genuinely interested in the motion picture that they will pay $12 a year to support an organization which offers the opportunity to study selected programs of unusual films."

Erpi Case Settlement Is Possible Warner Precedent

The settlement out of court of a recent breach of contract action between Electrical Research Products, Inc., and the Capitol theatre, Springfield, N. H., is seen as pointing a precedent possibly bearing on the litigation now pending in Wilmington, Del., between Warner and Erpi.

The attorney for the defense in the New Hampshire action, involving a sound installation, had raised in defense the principal claims made by the Stanley Corporation of America, a wholly owner Warner subsidiary, at Wilmington. The attorney offered a settlement before Erpi witnesses took the stand. Erpi accepted on terms involving payment by the defense of accrued charges in full and a "substantial" amount of liquidated damages.

Balaban Assumes Duties of Harry Katz in Chicago

Theatres operated by Publix in Indiana and Illinois, including the Great States circuit, are now being supervised by John Balaban, from Chicago, as the result of the recent resignation of Harry Katz, who was director of the division.

Alex Halperin, division booker of the Illinois-Indiana theatres, has also resigned. With the addition of these theatres, the Balaban & Katz circuit becomes the largest unit in the decentralized Publix organization.

FINANCIAL REVISIONS OF RKO ARE OUTLINED

Further Revisions Indicated in Balance Sheet of Sept. 30 After Exchange Approval of Additional Listing of Stock

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. last week disclosed further revisions of its financial structure. These are outlined in the September 30 balance sheet which was made available after the New York Stock Exchange had approved the listing of 100,000 additional common shares which are to be issued to Rockefeller Center, Inc., in consideration of a substantial reduction in the amount of space in Radio City originally contracted for by RKO. Radio Corporation of America, which controls RKO, is issuing a similar block of stock to the Rockefeller interests, making the latter one of the large stockholders both of RKO and RCA.

Reduction in space required by RKO and Radio became necessary owing to the consent decree obtained by the Department of Justice last month stipulating the severence of General Electric and Westinghouse from Radio and RKO. With the additional listing, RKO will have outstanding 2,571,355¾ shares, including 16,437 shares held in the company's treasury.

The September 30, 1932, balance sheet of RKO gives effect to the revision as of January 1, 1932, of book values of certain assets of the corporation and its subsidiaries, the changes being subsequent to the recapitalization of the company and the underwriting of a new debenture issue by the Radio Corporation.

RKO's table of depression and amortization shows that the corporation annually writes off depreciation of buildings at the rate of from 2 to 5 per cent; sound equipment, at 20 per cent per year; furniture, equipment and furnishings, from 10 to 33 1/3 per cent; organs 5 per cent; automobiles, 33 1/3 per cent, and trucks, at 25 per cent. The book values of leaseholds and leased properties are being amortized over the terms of the leases or over the estimated life of the properties—whichever is the shorter.

Feature negatives are amortized 98 per cent in about 16 months, and 100 per cent by the 20th month. They are amortized 52 per cent within the third month. Feature positives reach complete amortization at the 13th month, 98 per cent by the 10th, and 65½ within the third.

The September 30 balance sheets shows current assets of $17,590,676, compared with $26,878,694 on December 31, 1931, against current liabilities of $8,722,554 compared with $9,527,875 on December 31, 1931. Capital assets have been written down to $17,590,676 from $26,878,694 on December 31, 1931. Buildings and equipment, under this heading, have been written down to $25,419,847 from $36,242,868 and improvements and equipment on leased property have been written down to $14,160,290 from $21,990,961.

Among the current assets it is shown that unpaid subscriptions on debentures and stock amount to $3,854,231, compared with $10,674,170 at the close of 1931. Notes receivable increased to $207,319 from $87,655 and accounts receivable to $1,165,133 from $1,120,827.

Changes in investments and advances to affiliated and other companies show equities in capital stocks of affiliated and other companies unchanged at $1,073,523, based on appraisal. Unappraised capital stocks were reduced on the books to $1,060,732 from $1,307,651 and an item of $695,544, representing equity in investments and advances to wholly owned foreign subsidiary companies not consolidated, was eliminated entirely. Advances to affiliated companies were increased to $1,740,706 from $735,443.

Deferred charges, many to be disposed of before the end of 1932, totaled $4,979,289, compared with $3,662,625 at the end of 1931.

Among the liabilities a special reserve of $7,382,952 has been set up for the revaluation of capital assets, bringing total reserves to $11,086,356, compared with $4,351,926 at the end of 1931. The company has funded debt of $3,310,833 maturing before September 30, 1933, out of total funded debt of $38,491,784.

The new common stock of the company has been revalued on the books at $24,557,457, compared with $48,587,713 at the end of 1931. After deducting net loss of $4,964,331 incurred for the nine months ended September 30 the capital account, including capital surplus of $2,899,792, stood at $21,403,784, compared with $132,294,935 at the end of 1931.

After giving effect to the nine months' net loss the capital surplus of the company was completely wiped out, leaving net deficit of $6,053,465 deducted from the company's capital.

The detailed profit and loss statement of the company shows heavy economies made in salaries, the total being $17,579,547 for the nine months ended September 30, compared with $29,394,016 for the full year 1931. Operating and general expenses were $12,424,157 for the nine months, compared with $19,486,853 for all of 1931. Total expenses of $47,577,408 compare with $76,983,140 for all of 1931, and exceeded gross income of $46,830,645 by $746,762. Gross income for the nine months was $46,830,645, compared with $79,232,392 for all of 1931.

Wanger Leaving Columbia; May Join Radio Pictures

Walter Wanger, vice president of Columbia, will sever his connection with that company on January 16, according to Harry Cohn, president. Active in Columbia production for the past seven months, Mr. Wanger was previously general manager of production for Paramount.

Hollywood reports indicate Mr. Wanger may join Radio as an associate producer, perhaps under the unit system thought likely at that plant. Richard Schayer will leave Universal in January, three months before expiration of his contract, to join Columbia as associate producer and head of the scenario department, succeeding Mr. Wanger. Howard Estabrook may join Universal in place of Mr. Schayer, who was scenario head.

"RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS"

as seen by

BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

The Barrymore family will, in a hundred years, be a legend, or an historical fact both glamorous and romantic. They are the Medici Family of the stage—Catherine-Ethel Medici-Barrymore, Lorenzo the Magnificent, alias John Barrymore, and Allesandro Lionel Medici-Barrymore.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had the grand idea of putting the three Barrymores into a play. They chose a subject that fits the three Barrymores like a slug of whisky fits the gullet of a drink-snooper. The story is "Rasputin and the Empress," done by Charles MacArthur and splendidly directed and sumptuously conceived by Richard Boleslavsky. At its world-premiere at the New York Astor it was followed absorbingly by as brilliant and as famous an audience as I have seen at an opening in many years.

I can see nothing for "Rasputin and the Empress" but a hundred per cent box office attraction. Besides the tremendous pulling power of the names Lionel, Ethel and John (they could drop their last names entirely and still everybody would know who you are talking about), the scenarist and the director have put into this terrific (but sometimes slow-moving) drama of the fall of a mighty empire every ingredient that attracts and holds all classes of picture fans: romance, suspense, murder, battle, war-tensity, bitter humor, palatial sets, gaudy costuming and vivid characterizations.

The story of the strange monk who cured the Czar's son by hypnotism when all medical aid had failed, his life-and-death grip on the Romanoffs, his decline, his murder and the catastrophe of 1914 follows very closely the historical facts. There has been injected into the story—and very plausibly—a Prince Chegodieff and his sweetheart, Princess Natasha. It is because Rasputin, feeling his power invincible, has assaulted Natasha that Prince Chegodieff falls upon this diabolical monk and in a terrific scene—one of the most effective ever seen on the screen—pounds Rasputin almost to death with an iron bar and throws his body into the Neva.

As for the story, the only criticism I can make is that it should be tightened up in the first few reels. There are scenes where I felt the audience fidget.

The acting of the Barrymores was, in the main, superb, with the palm going to John Barrymore as the romantic Prince Chegodieff. I have always affirmed that John was the greatest of the Barrymores—when he wanted to be. Lately he has played a lot of monkeyshines. He seems, sometimes, to be spoofing himself, the role and the public. But in this picture he gives us the very best that is in him. Here are artistic sincerity, simplicity and directness, with the irritating mannerisms entirely deleted.

Ethel Barrymore looked superb and acted with dignity (every inch a queen) as the Czarina. She is at her best when she is awakened to the real character of Rasputin after the attack on Princess Natasha. A little less eye-rolling, however, would have aided her.

Lionel Barrymore as Rasputin was powerful and compelling—in spots. He has, of course, got to wear whiskers, and that always is a cause of laughter (mental, at least). When he tries to be diabolical he is least effective and more effective when he suggests evil than when he dishes it out.

"Rasputin and the Empress" will, I believe, be shown eventually in every picture-house in the country. It is a major event, both from an artistic and a box office point of view.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Richard Boleslavsky. Author, Charles MacArthur. Musical score by Herbert Stothart. Photography by William Daniels. Film editor, Tom Held. Running time, 127 minutes.

The Billion Dollar Scandal

(Paramount)

Drama

Almost forgotten headlines—the great oil scandals of a couple of presidential administrations ago—constitute the real background for this rather vivid story. Yet the story is so treated that a straight bid for human interest rather than a trite ethical political preachment seems to be its main objective.

So presented that it is broken up into three acts, the story opens with two confidence men, Ratsy and Kid McGurn, being paroled, as Fingers, who expected to go out with them is held in jail. Drama is introduced in this sequence as the disappointed Fingers plans to shoot his way out, only to have the warden, who is his friend, go to bat for him and get his parole.

Second act is in New York and comedy is its highlight as the punch-drunk Kid is knocked out in a ludicrous bout and the slangy Fingers and the wise-cracking Ratsy begin to wonder how they are going to eat as their hoped-to-be meal ticket blows up. Close of this episode features an auto accident, which might return the three to the pen, yet serves to bring about a meeting between Fingers and Masterson, who, after Fingers fixes him up, hires him as his trainer.

The job gives Fingers an opportunity of making "real people" out of his young brother, Babe. Opening the third act we find Fingers making a hit with Masterson and his "big shot" business and governmental associates. In on many tips, Fingers cashes in one the stock market and boosts his brother along, who in the meantime has fallen in love with Doris. Masterson, learning of the romance, decides to break it up and a fake stock tip ruins Fingers, who plans revenge.

It comes as a newspaper publisher, Griswold, gets to him and then the sensational headline stories that result in a senatorial investigation and the repurcusions with which every adult is familiar. Into it are woven all the scandal, framing, murders, suicides and double-crossings as well as personalities that featured those glaring stories. Fingers considers himself the "champeen of 120,000,000 peepul," but in the end, after all the drama, pathos and emotion-stirring incidents have run their course, he's just as dead as yesterday's hero, unable even to get a job from Griswold or any who have profited by his thrilling revelations.

As may be noted, a picture based on this type of news story, is lacking in any great love-interest romance, consequently its appeal to women will have to be created by the right kind of a campaign. The same admonition will likewise apply to the general campaign. In this line, it would appear that any too great description of the story will hurt rather than help the box office draw. One of the concluding lines in the picture is "nothing is as cold as yesterday's news," which should serve as a tip as to angles which should be ignored.

Without revealing the plot, personalities should carry the brunt of the selling campaign and catchlines that feature the characters as they are should predominate. Following up the title, which is intriguing enough and about which it is possible to erect some curiosity-

The Flag Lieutenant

(British & Dominions)

Comedy-Drama

If precedent is to be trusted, "The Flag Lieutenant" was a good picture before it went into production, for the silent version had a great vogue several years ago. And it may just as well be said, here and now, that the new version carries forward the reputation of its silent forbear, and provides a solid slice of entertainment for the mass. The glamour of the navy makes a fine background for this romantic comedy-drama, and it should make an equally solid background for your exploitation campaign. True, the ways of the British navy are not altogether those of Uncle Sam, but the kinship of the services is such that your patrons will readily appreciate all the atmosphere of the sea you put into your efforts.

But if there's capital to be made out of the marine element—and the naval sequences bear the stamp of authenticity—you also have a pull in selling the story on its "greater love hath no man" plot. It isn't exactly that, but it tells of how a certain Dicky Lascelles, putting the welfare of his best friend before his own, very much balls up his own chances, with the result that several hundred feet of good celluloid need to be used up before the tangle is unravelled and everything is set for him and his sweetie to make the middle aisle trip together. Plenty of rapid action characterizes the working out of the plot, and the long sequences showing bluejackets in action against the unleashed hordes of Mahound will hold your patrons firmly in their chairs.

Surely, then, I don't have to tell you how to exploit a picture of this type; for your best bet is to play it up on conventional lines. The names of the players won't mean much to your customers, though they may, after seeing the piece, hanker after a return visit from Henry Edwards and Anna Neagle. For both are of the type that makes pleasant watching to the romantically minded (as if there were any film "fan" who is not!), and they are supported by players who fit neatly into their roles. Customers will find something to laugh at, something to grip them and—most important—a little something to pipe their eye about.—Charman, London.

Produced by British & Dominions at Elstree, England. Directed by Henry Edwards. Story by Lt. Col. W. P. Drury and Major Leo Trevor. Adapted by Joan Wentworth Wood. Photography by Stanley Rodwell. Recording by J. S. Dennis. Film editing by Michael Hankinson. Naval technical advisor, Commander F. W. Gleed. Running time, 85 minutes.

Parachute Jumper

(Warner)

Drama

As a regular-run feature and for smaller town entertainment, particularly, this rather exciting romance drama, pepped up with a lot of circus airplane flying, is a reasonably active show.

Throughout the entire story there is ample evidence of attempts to present a brand of entertainment that will have an appeal for both adults and children and to both sexes. Thus there is much gayety surrounding the gyrations of the two ex-Marine Corps aviators which lets them indulge in a little excitement with the native damsels in a little Nicaragua jungle cantina. Also there is romance, drama, spectacle, thrills, scores of laughs in the dialogue, a digression with a "kept woman," a lot of broad hints of gangster menace and finally a thrilling mid-air brush with the Border Patrol Air Fleet, some breath-taking crashes and an interesting search climax. Yet in inserting the love interest, several bits of dialogue and action have been included that might not set so well with those other than the most liberal minded.

The picture covers a lot of territory from South America, with the sidewalks of New York as the first stopping point, where, in search of a job, Bill Keller meets Alabama, who is also looking for work. She goes to live in the same apartment with Bill and his pal Toodles, which may or may not be understood in its right meaning—a charitable gesture—by every audience. Stunt flying leads Bill to a job with Mrs. Newberry, who is Weber's sweetheart, and when their happy evening is interrupted by that gangster gentleman Bill trades his life for a job with him and then follow the rum-narcotic running episodes. Scenes are broken up by Alabama also getting a job with Weber and of course arousing Bill's jealousy. Several typical gangster gun fights precede Bill's and Toodles' final flight, which winds up when they are trapped in the air. Toodles bails out when his ship goes down, Weber is killed and Bill miraculously escapes unscathed when his plane crashes. Then the finding and straightening things out with Alabama.

The title and aeronautical atmosphere of the picture provide plenty of opportunity for interest creating exploitation. Tie up with airport fliers for aerial ballyhoo is in order. There is hardly enough of the Marine element to justify any contact with that branch of the government service. The dialogue contains many lines that can be transposed into punchy ad copy which stresses the thrills, excitement and colorful comedy of the picture. Several names in the cast—Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Frank McHugh, Leo Carrillo and Bette Davis should answer the demands for personalities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Based on an original story by Rian James. Screen play by John Francis Larkin. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Photographed by James Van Tress. Film editor, Ray Curtis. Art director, Jack Okey. Release date, January 28, 1933. Running time, 65 minutes.

Madame Butterfly

Drama

The long famous "Madame Butterfly" comes to the screen as the first of the features B. P. Schulberg, as an independent producer, has made on the Paramount lot and for Paramount release. Originally a story by John Luther Long and later a play by the late David Belasco, the dramatic story of the Japanese girl who loves an American officer not wisely but too well, has been transferred to the screen with painstaking effort and attention to detail.

The picture, however, by reason of its content, rather than any fault of production, is rather slow-moving. In consequence, its popularity at the box office is in a measure problematical. The cast is good, and the names popular. Sylvia Sidney offers a highly appealing Madame Butterfly, and with Cary Grant, who is in favor with the feminine contingent of the audience, and Charles Ruggles for comedy, the exhibitor has three excellent selling names for his marquee lights. In support are such well known names as Irving Pichel, Edmund Breese and Louise Carter.

The story is simple in itself. Grant and Ruggles, American officers, on shore leave in Japan, meet Miss Sidney, about to become a Geisha Girl. Despite a sweetheart, Sheila Terry, at home, Grant takes Miss Sidney as his wife. She learns to love him in the American manner, and when Grant leaves with the fleet, continues to keep his home in Japan as he left it. She awaits his return, which is delayed for three years, during which time she has a child. Meanwhile, he has married Miss Terry. Finally returning with his American wife, to whom he has told the story of the Geisha Girl, Grant goes to Miss Sidney, who has been elaborately preparing for his arrival, and tells her that their affair is ended. Sending her child with a servant to her family, Madame Butterfly commits suicide as the picture ends.

This may be rather "touchy" material in some communities, so perhaps it would be better to concentrate on the background of the famous story, plus the players performing in the film. Strike the dramatic side of the waiting Japanese wife and son, remaining away from any moral situations which may be discerned in a consideration of the subject matter.

The possibilities for lobby displays of the Oriental, particularly Japanese character, are excellent for attracting pedestrian attention. The picture will require hard work in selling, but should find reasonable favor with the women in particular.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Marion Gering. Screen play by Josephine Lovett and Joseph Moncure March. From the story by John Luther Long and the play by David Belasco. With music from the opera by Giacomo Puccini. Incidental music by W. Franke Harling. Photographed by David Abel. Release date, December 30, 1932. Running time, 86 minutes.

Lucky Devils

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The motion picture stunt men are glorified here and their glorification results in a show that is packed to the guards with thrilling entertainment and is so loaded with showmanship and exploitation possibilities that the sky is the limit in advertising and ballyhoo.

Starting with a sequence that whirled the preview audience into a welter of excitement, there is an expose shot that shows the whole thrilling bank holdup scene as just a part of a picture and then goes on to show the contributions which the stunt men make that put the nerve-jangling smashes into screen entertainment. All the inside stuff is revealed—the airplane dare-devilling, auto crashes, swings, leaps, jumps, rescues and what not.

Yet there is a real story behind all the thrills. One that is romantic, dramatic, breezy with sparkling comedy, sometimes tragic—as the stunt misses fire and the performer is killed—a love story that is full of emotion stirring human interest and a real stunt punch at the finish, a boat ride over a roaring cataract that enables Skipper, who had turned yellow in the eyes of his pals, to get the money that will insure his wife being properly taken care of while their baby is born.

All the colorful superstitions of the stunt men have been included, as have a whole host of interesting side lights on the way they live and love and hope that their names wont be the next to be scratched off the board. In such a fast moving succession of thrills, it would appear that the picture would be lacking in appeal to the women. But such is not the case. Interwoven through all the excitement is a love story, which portrays the woman's fear of her mate's hazardous calling that will sink right down into the heart of every woman who sees it. Likewise it might seem that a continuation of thrills would become monotonous, yet each different episode is so much a part of the main story that it tends to add to the suspense and create new interest.

Properly exploited, making use of an atmospheric campaign, that it just as exciting and interesting as the picture itself, in both advertising and ballyhoo, it appears that "Lucky Devils" can easily be turned into a real moneymaker. Stress the novelty of this show, its color and startling realism. Assure your patrons that this show features a brand of entertainment that will alternately hold them sitting on the edges of their chairs and then stirring their deepest sympathies; that it will make them gasp and laugh and that the breath taking climax will give them a new insight into just what men and women sometimes have to do to provide screen entertainment.

There is more than enough to hold the tense interest of adults of both sexes and the youngsters will be talking about it for weeks after they have seen it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Party Does Not Answer

(Capital Film)

Drama

A drama of a crook, a girl and a clever detective, this is fair German screen entertainment, but offering no assistance to the potential patron lacking a knowledge of the language. In consequence, the picture must be offered to an audience which can fully appreciate it through understanding of the dialogue.

Dorothea Wieck is the best cast name for the exhibitor who can advisably show the picture, since she acquired a considerable and wholly justified reputation for her performance in the notable "Maidens in Uniform," still playing on a two-a-day policy in New York. It must be recorded, however, that her work in the present film does not measure up to the standard reached in the earlier film, chiefly by reason of the material with which she has to work. The name is nonetheless important in selling the film.

The narrative is concerned with the manner in which the detective solves the origin of the mysterious thefts of the contents of the safe of a large company. The gentleman under suspicion, posing as the operator of an automobile school, is finally forced into admission of guilt through the efforts of his attractive secretary, played by Miss Wieck, and a young man who worms his way into the confidence of the criminal, but is in reality the son of the owner of the company which the crook victimized. The romance develops in expected fashion, and a bit of comedy, as well as excitement is introduced when the students of a police school become closely involved in the discovery of the criminal. When he escapes in a high-powered car the students give chase, mounted on motorcycles.

This is fair entertainment for those who, through an understanding of German, can more readily appreciate the plot and its development. One name will mean something to the patrons, and should be used to the best advantage. There is no real mystery element involved, consequently it would be inadvisable to place any stress on that angle.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Elite Tonfilm. Distributed by Capital Film Exchange. Story by Eis and Katscher. Directed by Rudolf Katscher and Marc Sorkin. Photographed by Franz Planer. Sound by Jansen. Release date, November 29, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

The Gay Nighties

(RKO Radio)

Speed and Laughs

Clark and McCullough take a dab in politics and use the age-old gag of a vampire lure to put their opponent out of the race and incidentally get themselves into a peck of trouble. McCullough is the political manager; Clark is his candidate. Arriving at the convention hotel, they find their opponent almost sure of the nomination. The hotel is a madhouse of strange happenings. A gangster battle, with popping pistols and roaring machine guns, rages up and down the corridors and through their rooms. A newspaper reporter can't find a place to pitch his bed.

Just as McCullough is dressed up to impersonate a woman and a date is made with his rival, a sleep-walking beauty wanders upon the scene. Politics is forgotten and even while a squad of motorcycle policemen race through the corridors, Clark is engrossed in trying to meet the sleep-walker. And when all is thought to have been arranged, instead of the beauty being in the room, it's the wandering reporter.

The picture moves with lots of speed, and laughs tumble over each other. Running time, 18 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Duck Hunter's Paradise

(MGM)

Fair

Thousands of ducks of all species swarm overhead as Mr. and Mrs. Hunter in their duck blind among the rushes take quick and invariably successful shots at the flocks wheeling above. Interesting is the manner in which their dog retrieves the fallen ducks, instinctively choosing a wounded rather than a dead duck, knowing the wounded may escape, and amusing is his encounter with a skunk, which ends in disaster and sends him home in disgrace. A fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Glad Rags to Riches

Appealing

The Baby Stars present a likable bit with melodrama made richly humorous by the youth of the players. The tot who played the villainous proprietor of the night club is particularly good. There's a natural appeal to juveniles here.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Gorges of the Ganges

(Fox)

Splendid

Pictorially beautiful, striking in subject matter and material, this subject of the Magic Carpet series carries the audience into the racing currents of the turbulent waters of the Ganges River, where the huge and unwieldy river junks laboriously make their way up the stream, where women beat their clothes against the rocks in a crude laundry beside the rushing tide. Reaching a pinnacle of pictorial impression is the sequence showing the peasant natives, harnessed like horses, dragging the boat up stream, sometimes wading to their waists, again struggling with animal-like doggedness at their slaving task. There is certainly no need for the absent dialogue here.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Sponge Divers of Tarpon

(Stanley)

Excellent

The use of Western Electric wide range recording equipment at the location of the filming has provided this subject with a unique and interesting feature of difference. Pictured is the work of the Greek sponge divers of Tarpon Springs, Fla., with the actual sound of their voices, the movement of the divers and the hum of the activity adding much to the effectiveness of the subject. Produced by Cinelog Corporation under the supervision of Lorenzo Del Riccio, the short is of wide appeal and general interest, worth a spot on any bill. Lowell Thomas renders accompanying dialogue. Running time, 11 minutes.

The Pie-Covered Wagon

Novel

Rather novel, in a measure amusing, is this short subject featuring a group of cute baby stars, infants but shortly out of the safety pin stage, who enact a burlesque upon the covered wagon-Indian raid theme, with entertaining results. The babies are in the first place attractive, in the second amusing in their costumes and lastly apparently having the time of their lives which reaction with little doubt should transfer itself to the audience. An amusing novelty. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Tiger Hunt

(Principal)

Unusual

After a brief introduction, Commander Dyott, famed English explorer, renders the accompanying descriptive dialogue to these scenes of a tiger hunt, in the grand manner, in the jungles of India. Indicating that the death of the marauding tiger, the lord of the jungle, is a worthwhile event in the jungle, the explorer describes the hunt, conducted on the backs of one hundred huge elephants trained for the purpose. Unusually effective closeups of the fleeing tigers are interesting, but the actions of the elephants are perhaps of greater appeal. An interesting subject.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Broadway Gossip

Interesting

There is newness and newsiness in the series of the "columnist newsreel" as reported by Leo Donnelly. Whether there's a danger of overfeeding the public with sensational news of the stars and their loves is a subject in itself. That the material should be well received seems indisputable.—Running time, 9 minutes.

STRANGE INTERLUDE

Following its 5 months run at the $2 Astor Theatre on Broadway and its Road-Show engagements in principal cities, "Strange Interlude" comes at popular prices to the theatres of America. M-G-M is proud to give to theatres a new impetus in entertainment, a remarkable stage play made into a talking picture to which time will accord an immortal place in film annals.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Alamo, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

Don't let anybody tell you that it doesn't get cold down here in the Rio Grande valley. This town is said to be 300 miles south of the southern part of Florida where they grow fruit and we have been colder down here than we have been in many places in the north.

It has rained constantly for ten days and ten nights and the mercury has hung around 32 degrees and that is colder than 10 below in Nebraska, at least you get colder. Last night it dropped to 24 degrees and that fixed their beans, corn, tomatoes and peppers, and outside of their grapefruit, those are their main crops, and this is going to be pretty tough on this valley country.

We have had our tarpon tackle all ready, and a man and boat engaged to take us out in the Gulf to catch a tarpon and hammer-head shark, but the weather has been so rough we have been unable to go. That's some more of our luck. We wanted to show some of those Izaak Waltons up north what real fishing was and now we are leaving for the north and won't be able to do it.

Hip hurrah, out comes "What the Picture Did for Me," and when we sit down with our old Jimmy pipe and a copy of the HERALD and turn to that department we feel like we could lick Jack Dempsey, Mike Malony and a Texas Longhorn in one round. It certainly is good to see all those familiar names in print again, boys we have called on and who have shown us such a royal time, and each name calls to mind some particular thing or event that made a lasting impression on us. For instance, there's Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Illinois, who walloped the tar out of us on the golf links and then staked us to a good dinner but who gave a woman a check for a renewal of his subscription to the HERALD when it wasn't out and who never had authority to take subscriptions, but we got there just in time to save him. Joe shouldn't fall for strange women, we never do.

Then there is R. V. Fletcher of Hartington, Nebraska, who has to be a swell fellow to live in Hartington; we know him and he is. Charles Lee Hyde of Pierre, South Dakota, one of the boys who helped to make that state a glorious place to live provided you are not particularly adverse to grasshoppers. Charles Lee furnishes entertainment for the South Dakota solons when the legislature is in session and the citizens of that glorious estate during the balance of the year. Charles knows a good show and nothing short of that will satisfy Charles.

We note also our old friend Harry Pace of Audubon, Iowa. There's a regular guy. He never carries a gun when we call on him and he always calls us "Daddy," which we don't like very much. Steve Farrar of Harrisburg, Illinois, has his name in that department also. Steve is a lover of liver and onions but says he doesn't like home brew. He always treated us like we were one of the family.

P. G. Estee of Parker, South Dakota (the champion fish liar of the Northwest), gets in on the first issue (we knew he would) and if the HERALD will blue-pencil some of his fish yarns it will save us from having to give the readers the low down on his piscatorial ability, we know him pretty well and would dislike to show him up, because he's a pretty fine chap.

Mrs. P. J. Zorn of Julesburg, Colorado, told us when we called on her recently that she would send some reports on pictures. We knew she'd do it because she prides herself on her record for truthfulness. She is not only a delightful lady but she's a booster for the HERALD, and that alone would cover a multitude of sins, if she had any, which she hasn't.

We can't remember whether we have met P. A. Stallings of Bowie, Texas, or not. If we haven't that's just too bad for both of us, but we think we did meet him some three years ago. We may meet him again before we leave the state.

W. T. Biggs of Adair, Iowa, says he is no kin to Uncle 'Leazer and Aunt Polly Biggs. We don't think he is because Uncle 'Leazer was a shiftless kind of a guy and W. T. is right on the job all the while, that's why the Adair folks know they will always be entertained at his theatre.

H. J. Longaaker of Glenwood, Minnesota, has always been pretty jealous of P. G. Estee of Parker, S. D. There's a rivalry between them as to who can tell the biggest fish yarn, but neither of them are in it with Elmer Gailey of Wayne, Nebraska. Elmer is a decendent of Ananias and always cops the blue ribbons.

We were glad to note that Joseph J. Greene of Macomb, Illinois, has also reported to the department. We met him last summer when we were touring Illinois. He manages the Illinois theatre for our old friend Mr. Hainline. Mr. Hainline was confined to his bed when we called but Mr. Greene showed us every courtesy. Those Illinois boys always do.

There are a lot of other familiar names in this department but space forbids further mention. Many of them are familiar to us, but what we would like to know is why H. G. Stuttmund of Chandler, Oklahoma; Phil Rand of Salmon, Idaho; C. J. Hartman of Carnage, Oklahoma; that guy Zimmerman of San Marcus, Texas; Reeves of Minard, Texas; Creel of Omaha, Nebraska, and dozens of others are not shooting in reports. We wouldn't dare say that these guys are lazy, that wouldn't sound good, but b'gosh, that's our judgment just the same, and now if you birds don't want to get a good bawling out you better get busy and this goes for a lot more of you, too.

Mr. Ramsaye, editor of the HERALD, says that the cow is largely responsible for the motion picture because she eats mustard and that produces gelatine from which the films are made. Mr. Ramsaye's knowledge of cowology is a little out of plumb. The fact is that Nebraska alfalfa and corn are the component elements that enter not only into the cow but into the making of gelatine as well. We are willing to give the cow credit for what she does but that "mustard" stuff don't go.

That "rainy season" in California would look like a dry spell in August compared to this Valley weather. Fifteen days and nights of constant rain with no letup in sight. We'll take twenty below in Nebraska for ours.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

THE BOILING POINT: Hoot Gibson—A good western. Played Dec. 10.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston—One of the best program pictures that we have ever shown. Did not draw big business but pleased the ones that came. Running time, 76 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston, Pat O'Brien and Constance Cummings—A mighty good picture, good cast and will give complete satisfaction. Played Nov. 11. Running time, 78 minutes—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

MAKER OF MEN: Jack Holt, Richard Cromwell--Fair picture with football college twist which has been thoroughly overdone. Did fair at box office. Jack Holt extra good as usual. Admission 10-15 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—A splendid western. 6 reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou, Mayo Methot—Good murder mystery story well done with Adolphe Menjou as Thatcher Colt. Suspense splendidly carried. Very satisfactory picture of type.—E. H. Greenhalgh, Star Theatre, Ferron, Utah. Small town patronage.

THE NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—Amusing comedy drama that kept the audience in a happy state and turned them loose with a satisfied smile. Played Nov. 13.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—Top notch entertainment. Big box office.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carol Lombard—Here's a dandy picture for the ladies (and the men). Fine comedy vein throughout. What a fashion show, and Carol is easy to look at. Good reaction for present conditions.—E. H. Greenhalgh, Star Theatre, Ferron, Utah. Small town patronage.

THREE WISE GIRLS: Jean Harlow, Mae Clarke, Marie Prevost—Dandy little drama that shows life as it really is and in which the girl who goes straight wins deserved happiness. Played Dec. 4.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

WAR CORRESPONDENT: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves, Lila Lee—Extra good show, extra good drawing power. Very little war scenes. Good plot. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—This is a "pip" of a picture. Don't let the critics tell you it is hokum and discourage you. Hokum is much truer to the real spirit of life than realism. This is a house builder, a steady patronage winner. Best of all, nobody sings in it, thank God. Tracy is not so hot—Constance Cummings is better—the old senator in the picture does the best acting in a year's pictures.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy and Constance Cummings—A very fine picture that pleased all who saw it except those who had read the book and come expecting to see exactly what was in the book. In the picture all thy used from the book was the title, then wrote a very fine little story of Washington politics that clicks 100 per cent. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

First National

THE CRASH: Ruth Chatterton—A good picture that pleased the handful that saw it. This below freezing weather that people are not accustomed to knocked the attendance to nothing.—Gerald Stettmund, H. S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla.

DOCTOR X: Lionel Atwill, Lee Tracy, Fay Wray—A swell picture that pleased most all we got in to see it. Swell comedy by Lee Tracy makes this one fine picture. Technicolor fine, photography good. Should please most any audience. Played Dec. 7-8.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR X: Lionel Atwill and Fay Wray—Plenty of good compliments on the technicolor. Quite a horror picture made the more effective because of the color. Some comedy by Lee Tracy but not enough. Drew okay especially for the technicolor. No objections heard because of the shivers in the story. Receipts better than average. Played Nov. 29-30-Dec. 1. Running time, 80 minutes.——R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

1790 Broadway, New York

FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD: Joe E. Brown—Filled every seat on this one both nights. Well liked by my patrons. A good comedy. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE HATCHET MAN: Edward G. Robinson, Loretta Young—Fine show enjoyed by all who saw it, but didn't get any money due to severe sleet and ice storm. Going to play it over. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young, Eric Linden—Excellent. Played Dec. 12.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. General patronage.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Not so good as previous Brown efforts, but drew about same. Played Nov. 4-5. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

UNION DEPOT: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Joan Blondell—A good picture that drew extra business—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Bad weather and no draw but very fine comedy. Pleased all and garnered many laughs. Better picture than "The Tenderfoot."—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Very fine show. Better than average. Clara is fine. Male leads don't mean anything.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb., Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Appeals to kids. Not too much money in it.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. General patronage.

Played Dec. 9-10. Running time, 74 minutes.—J. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Irene Ware—Satisfactory gross. I would not run it in the Roxy, New York, but OK for the sticks. Big attraction for children, old and young.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

CONGORILLA: Ran this on Saturday to increased pleased business. Played Dec. 3.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Okla. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S LOTTERY: Elissa Landi—Miss Landi is not the type generally popular in small towns but her beauty and acting are worthy of any man's screen and also of far better vehicles than she has been given. Why do they insist upon giving such poor plays to CONGORILLA: Too many of the same. Played Dec. 9.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: The Martin Johnsons—The work of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, this jungle picture is far above the average of such pictures. Pleased.

finished actresses as Miss Landi and Tallulah Bankhead? Played Dec. 7-8. Running time, 74 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—This is not up to Rogers' standard, but it pleased them anyway. Drew extra business for three days where we always run pictures two days.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Rogers came back in this at the box office. The public like it. Rogers leaves a clean, constructive atmosphere behind—no whimsy.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

THE FIRST YEAR: Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor—A splendid entertainment. The kind we need. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—My first Gaynor-Farrell picture since "Seventh Heaven," and to be frank, I was disappointed, both in the picture and the box office. The girls in this town would be glad to take up a collection to give Farrell a good haircut for Christmas. I am told by the Gaynor-Farrell fans that this picture is not up to the standard of other releases. Sets, sound and supporting members of the cast are excellent, but why do they have to make Farrell appear silly in order to try to create a little sympathy for them. Played Dec. 11—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family and rural patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—A typical Zane Grey western. Well liked by those who saw it. Bad weather and small crowds. Farmer trade is practically at a standstill. Played Dec. 9-10.—Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—As a college graduate with the side whiskers, O'Brien just doesn't fit. He'll have to reduce about 100 pounds before he looks like a college chap. As an Indian chief he is also a wet blanket, but as a cowboy on the horse he is okay. Beautiful scenery, sound okay and picture fair. Played Dec. 9—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family and rural patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Good and well liked—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Program picture that escapes the hook. Sally Eilers means nothing whatever at the box office.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy—Just another good picture that will get by and please Saturday night audience if you can get them in. Good average entertainment.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

A PASSPORT TO HELL: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Different from usual run of dramas and held interest from start to finish. Played Nov. 6.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen—The racketeers view the huge football crowds and decide to "muscle in." They buy colleges of their own and substitute their own lineups. Several musical comedy numbers interspersed. Pleased Sunday evening patrons. Played Dec. 11-12. Runing time, 75 minutes.—J. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—Step on this one. This was a surprise picture of the year for me. Should have done extra advertising and played three days. House packed two days. As sweet a little story as ever flashed on any screen. Excellent acting by Marian Nixon and Ralph Bellamy. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—This picture was sold by Fox with assurance that Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell would make it, then changed that cast. But I will grant them this, that as far as audiences were concerned, they did not miss, either. Marian Nixon and Ralph Bellamy are certainly a swell team. This little Nixon girl is a comer and Janet Gaynor will have to watch her laurels, for Miss Nixon carried the audience with her all the way with an outstanding performance that was great. Then there is another in this cast and that is Louise Closser Hale as the snooty aunt, and what a trooper, and she must be, for she gave the most finished performance and carried the comedy all the way. When they ask where she came from, and why they have not seen her before, you know she is good. Another thing, and that is that it is the first remade picture that this house has run that clicked.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—Not very many of the present generation know anything about Sherlock Holmes, so if you can get them in, it will please them.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter, John Boles, Miriam Jordan—Good programer of this class. Pleased 50%. Patrons are looking for something to cheer them up and this does not do that. Played Dec. 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—This one has received just fair reviews but to me is a very fine piece of entertainment that will take care of itself.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Here is one of the few really outstanding pictures on the market. Excellent entertainment for entire family.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

WEEK ENDS ONLY: Joan Bennett, Ben Lyon—Extra good show to extra good business at bargain prices of 10 cents to all.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell, Joan Bennett, Ralph Bellamy—We ran this on Saturday and pleased practically all. Miss Bennett should not waste her talent on this class of stories. She's too good. Eugene Pallette is the one that puts the show over. Played Dec. 10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell, Joan Bennett—A splendid picture. Cast good. Story old but good. Scenery great. Played Dec. 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell, Joan Bennett—Splendid program picture that should draw in good weather. We had no business at all on it. In fact, could not even run the second night because of sleet on the ground. Played Dec. 15-16.—Mrs. Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AS YOU DESIRE ME: Greta Garbo—The best Garbo I've ever shown and the only one to get any money. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—A wonderful picture. The star a wonder. The cast and story fine. Please any audience. Played Dec. 15-16.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel, Lewis Stone—A mighty fine little picture. Cold weather hurt business considerably. Running time, 72 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—Very few saw this due to terrible weather and the flu epidemic. Few commented on it so I suppose it pleased the few who saw it. It is depressing but ends satisfactorily. Played Dec. 11-12.—Mrs. Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—Just another picture that may get by and may not. Not for the kids.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—Should be "Faithful" instead of "Faithless." Story depressing these times. Should not have to pay to see and live the depression over. Both Tallulah Bankhead and Robert Montgomery are good in their parts, and would like to see them in a good light comedy. Something to cheer us up. Played Dec. 11-12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Did not click here any better than average picture and patrons not satisfied as a whole. Played Dec. 2-3.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Big but not great for small towns. Barely got by at the percentage and with extra advertising costs. Disappointed.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—I have played 'em big and little for eight years but this one took the worst nose dive of any yet. Just fair entertainment. Won't go in a small town. Charge 10-40 cents, too steep for the little fellow. Would have got twice the money at 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Patrons disappointed, probably because they had heard about it having been shown at $1.50. Lionel Barrymore and Joan Crawford received favorable comment. None liked Greta Garbo. We had a few leave on it. But it's a good picture at that. Not as good as some others for small town. Played Dec. 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HERE'S COOPERATION WITH A CAPITAL "S"

Harold Smith, proprietor of the Dreamland theatre at Carson, Iowa, sends us the kind of postcard message that all contributors to this department like to read. Here it is:

"I have not received any report blanks for the 'What the Picture Did for Me' department.

"Will you please send some."

They're already Carson-bound.

HUDDLE: Ramon Novarro: Best Ramon Novarro since "The Pagan" and did plenty of business. Wish we could have had "What the Picture Did for Me" department then. If I had known what it was and how it drew I could have had $20 or $30 more money by getting out and working. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston, Lupe Velez—Good acting but terrible story. Pleased no one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston, Lupe Velez—Don't play this on Sunday. I did, and to my sorrow. The acting is splendid but the story very depressing. It did not draw and those who saw it complained.—Mrs. Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff, Lewis Stone, Karen Morley, Myrna Loy—Another horror picture that stretches the imagination. It may get the business but they will not like it too much. Over-drawn, not logical that such things happen.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff, Karen Morley, Lewis Stone, Myrna Loy—Good of its kind. Too many such pictures been released lately. Patrons did not care for it. Played Dec. 6-7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NEW MORALS FOR OLD: Robert Young, Louis Stone—Not much show and business the same. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and Hardy—A good funny feature. Satisfied them all. 6 reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PAYMENT DEFERRED: Charles Laughton, Maureen O'Sullivan—One of the worst Metro has ever made. More walkouts than on any picture we have ever played. Patrons remarked that they came to be entertained, not to sob and sit horrified. Although acting was fine it just didn't please the few we did get in. Played Dec. 5-6.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler and Polly Moran—Lots of good clean comedy. A very good family picture. Played Nov. 22-23. Running time, 76 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark.—General patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—A mighty fine feature. Stars extra good and cast fine. Played Dec. 11-12.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—A swell picture, and should go over anywhere. Business better than last few Wednesdays and Thursdays. Fine acting by Jean Harlow and Clark Gable makes this a wonderful picture. Had lots of compliments on how good it was. Played Dec. 16-17.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow, Chester Morris—This one ranked third for house records. Just a fair picture but will do business. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—One of the best pictures we have had in many moons. Plenty of compliments from patrons and patrons still talking about it. We need more that cause favorable comment a few days after playing. Played Dec. 4-5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Business satisfactory. This fine picture demonstrates the need of romance in steady quantity and with plenty of sentiment, a need not filled by the modernistic product. Romance will outlive modernism.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—A fine picture but a little over the heads of the small town theatre goers. It will please and it is artistically done with Norma Shearer absolutely at the top of her form in putting over the picture. It is a credit to a lot of them that we have run it, in that it is clean with a sweet story.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

UNASHAMED: Helen Twelvetrees, Robert Young, Lewis Stone—A fair piece of entertainment which did average business. Extra fine acting by every member of the cast. Admission 10-25 cents.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore, Karen Morley—Very good picture depicting life in the Capital. Played during a cold wave and business was decidedly off. No fault of the picture. Running time, 74 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Monogram

THIRTEENTH GUEST: Ginger Rogers—Just wouldn't come out for this and you can't blame them much. Just another mystery story and we are having too many. Acting is no good. Recording and photography is plenty bad. Played Dec. 12-13. Running time, 66 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams, Bing Crosby and Radio Stars—A "pip" of a picture that should get plenty everywhere. If the producers don't run the idea to death we can use one like this every three months regularly. Paramount is systematically knocked by competitors but it makes good pictures.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams and Radio Stars—Some parts in this picture are good; others are bad, but as a whole it should please. Business fair. Played Dec. 19-20.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Ia. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Irwin, Leila Hyams, Bing Crosby and other radio stars—Far above average. Radio must have sold this picture for they came out like old times. Played Nov. 27-28-29. Running time, 83 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Very well received. Not a big picture but will get over fairly well where Miss Dietrich is liked. Running time, 85 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich. This did not go over for us in spite of extra exploitation. Although it is a picture that holds interest, the unpleasant theme keeps it from being a small town or family picture. Played Nov. 21-22. Running time, 82 minutes—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP: Gary Cooper—We made a mistake in playing this on Saturday. Although the submarine scenes have quite a bit of action they haven't enough for Saturday. Good picture that drew only fair. Played Nov. 18-19. Running time, 70 minutes—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Good out-of-door picture, with plot just like many others. Only difference: this had Zane Grey's name as author and Paramount charged us extra for that. Played Dec. 16-17.—J. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott and Susan Fleming—These class westerns certainly please a small town audience. They like 'em.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

HORSEFEATHERS: Four Marx Bros.—Audience about equally divided. Some pleased; others thought it an over-dose of nonsense. That's all it is—eight reels of nonsense. Played Dec. 18-19.—J. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HORSEFEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Disappointing business. Sameness about these Marx Brothers. Not all audience pleased.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

HORSEFEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—As good as any of the Marx Brothers' pictures. Drew good business and seemed to please everyone. My patrons did not seem to think that it was any better than the previous ones, however, but it pleased and that is what we want in pictures today. Running time, 68 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—These boys are a scream and everybody goes crazy about them. We need more pictures made by them. Excellent attendance. Played Oct. 16-17. Running time, 68 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Box office natural. Played Nov. 6-7.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. Average patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette McDonald—Some of my patrons like Chevalier and some of them don't. Nevertheless, he is a great actor and does great work in this one. Attendance fair. Played Nov. 6-7. Running time, 104 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Does not quite come up to the previous Chevalier pictures. Patrons were not very enthusiastic about it and it did not do much at the box office. Running time, 104 minutes—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Not near as good as "One Hour with You." Pretty spicy, too. His next one will have to be better if he stays in the limelight. Played Dec. 16.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Complete box office flop, many turned away in front of box office. Pictures like this are a triumph for the director and a defeat for the exhibitor. Clever, artistic, beautifully produced, it should be run at a specialized art theatre in New York. A treat for sophisticates, a headache for practical showmen.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald—Slightly better than average business, picking up on second night, which always proves that a picture is liked. Played Nov. 28-29. Running time, 104 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie and Marian Nixon—Great show and a wonderful Saturday night picture. Will make Saturday night look like old times.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY:—Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Drew very good and was well received. Did not receive the laughs that Lloyd generally brings. Well worth playing though if you do not pay too much for it. Running time, 96 minutes—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—Just fair. The young people seemed to like it. Another racketeer picture with just a little different twist. The cast is good and they all do well with their parts. The trouble is with the story. Shakespere was right, "the play's the thing." Give me a good story and forget the cast. Played Dec. 14.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family and rural patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft and Constance Cummings—Very entertaining picture. Lots of good comments from the cash customers, although it did not draw so good. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 70 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee, Mary Boland—This picture made me more money than any picture I have played in the last six months. While it is not anything to get excited over it is a good little picture and pleased the majority. Running time, 72 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee and Gene Raymond—One of the nicest shows we have shown for many moons. Any audience will like this. Wonderful direction. Recording good. Played Nov. 13-14.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee and Gene Raymond—This was a good picture for the kind. Some of my patrons liked it and others didn't. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Charles Ruggles—one of the best pictures I have ever played. Charles Ruggles keeps the patrons laughing from start to finish. Ideal for small towns.—P. H. Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes—Fine picture. Good holiday business. New plot. Paramount is making good this year. People turning from box office, however, on football stories. One more mess of them will be all flops.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes—A real production that holds interest from start to finish. Paramount is clicking this year better than ever. This is a real good mystery show and will please without any doubt. Played Nov. 25.—H. J. Egan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—Smart, clever entertainment. One of the higher type pictures that will take some selling in a small town but if you can get them in, it will please and they will like it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Kay Francis, Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Harshall—Pleased almost everybody. Played Dec. 10.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

MARTINA RISES TO REMARK

C. V. Martina, Playhouse theatre at Clyde, N. Y., and a veteran contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me," has this to say anent comedies:

"Most comedies released nowadays do not make patrons laugh, and some make them cry for the time they must spend to see them through in order to wait for the feature. More action and less talking would probably help. The producers are trying to save by talk instead of moving about different places. Producers would do the industry a lot of good by screening the comedies they made in silent days and make them accordingly."

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins and Herbert Marshall—Now, boys, here is a real picture. Give this your best dates and sleep on it. It's 100% entertainment, perfect cast, sets and sound. The story is great. Played Dec. 7—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family and rural patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins and Kay Francis—A real smart picture that has plenty of class and will really please. My patrons thoroughly enjoyed it. Played Dec. 14-15. Running time, 73 minutes—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell, Eric Linden—Grossed well with "not recommended for children" warning in advertisements. Got the girls, who liked it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—Swell. Good results. Worth a Sunday spot anywhere.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal.—General patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio and Joel McCrea—Drew better than average. Only comments against it were in the change in story from the original play. However, nice entertainment. Played Nov. 1-2-3. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: An interesting educational jungle picture that draws well and satisfies 90%. Very appropriate for special matinee for schools. Played Dec. 1.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Fine in every respect. The animal shots are wonderful.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Fair picture, light business. This whole industry has been built up on the western trade. I wonder how many hundred millions of dollars has been spent by the public in twenty-five years to see this same story.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

THE CONQUERORS: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—A good picture but that's all. No epic. Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Another chain gang picture. Patrons liked it very much. Played Nov. 29—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—Cleaned up with this swell picture. If advertised, Wheeler and Woolsey collect dough.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—One continuous laugh. Best comedy so far this year. Played Dec. 5.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler & Woolsey—These two are getting worse all the time and this picture is the poorest of the lot. Unless they put out a real picture, it's going to be just too bad for these boys.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—The champion cut-ups uphold their reputation as the aces of fun-land. Burlesque football game a scream. Good business tonic. Played Dec. 8.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—A fair comedy but not up to their standard. Played Dec. 11-12. Running time, 74 minutes—Orrie F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Pleased the children and half the grown-ups. Played Dec. 10. —L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Great show for the kids. Best yet.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Ran this only one day. We made arrangements to have the schools announce that all grade pupils would be admitted after school was dismissed for 5c, high school children 10c. This special price was good until 5:30 p.m. We had a house full of kids that helped the gross considerably. Adults do not care much for this picture and I would suggest you give some inducement to get the kids in to see it.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix, Gwili Andre—Action, pathos, comedy, suspense, novelty. This proved a good week-end feature and drew good patronage. Played Oct. 20.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—Another good Constance Bennett show. Action moves slowly, however, and where they want life and pep this won't satisfy but believe the cast will please majority.—Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

STATE'S ATTORNEY: John Barrymore, Helen Twelvetrees—Excellent trial picture that went over good. John Barrymore does some great work.—P. H. Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne, Myrna Loy—Good gross. Fair picture. Stress the author, who means more at the box office than the cast. The producers failed to stress the author sufficiently in their advertising mats. Producers buy big writer names and then conceal them.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. [Author, Tiffany Thayer.—Ed.]

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD: Constance Bennett—Connie holds up her reputation in this clever story of the inside of Hollywood and fulfilled the expectation of her friends. Played Nov. 27.—C. S. McDowell, Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, Okla. General patronage.

Tiffany

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—One of Ken's best. Plenty of action, a cross-country race which furnishes the whole plot. Had a good Saturday regardless of Christmas shopping and falling snow. Should please any Saturday crowd that expects a rough and roudy Western. Played Dec. 17. —Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

THE LAST MILE: Preston Foster—An excellent picture of its type, but did not draw film rental on account of stars being unknown. Played Dec. 6. Running time, 84 minutes—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Good for any day in week. Phil March, Gay Theatre, Wayne, Neb. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—A real good story and a dandy show. Better than the "Spirit of Notre Dame" but did not draw for me. If you can get them in, it will please. Universal has some real shows this year. Played Dec. 17.—H. J. Egan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural community patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen and Gloria Stuart—Just a little better than average business. Especially pleased all football fans. Lots of remarks that it's a dandy football story. It drew those who knew the fame of the all-American football team and satisfied them to see the action of this team. Didn't seem to be a lot of dumb actors but almost true football story of these great players. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles, Irene Dunne—Splendid picture beautifully acted. Profitable business. John Boles has not yet realized his possibilities. He can be made into first rate box office. Irene Dunne a fine actress.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Fine picture. Good money maker and should be run by all.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. General patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—The biggest draw of this season and it pleased nearly 100%. More of a woman's picture but it is a real one and deserves extra advertising. Book is well read and everyone seems to know in advance that it is a good show. Played Nov. 30.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Hardly a small town theme. In spite of that, the picture was generally well received and the acting was wonderful. Played Dec. 11-12. Running time, 89 minutes. Horn & Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles and Irene Dunne—A picture that you are really proud to present. Will draw extra business. Pleased 100 percent. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 84 minutes—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Didn't hold up like usual Saturdays. Might be because of holiday shopping. Picture, although not up to the Tom Mix standard, has plenty action but not enough fighting and "shootin' 'em up." Should please. Played Dec. 10. —Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

IGLOO: Esquimaux who are better actors than many in Hollywood—Splendid picture, not given proper credit by critics. A gold mine if it was exploited as a road show by a real showman. Work with schools, which should be let out for students to see this wonderful picture. Didn't know how good it was or would have cleaned up. Did excellent business on it anyway.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres and Maureen O'Sullivan—Ayres is a hot shot reporter in this one. He acts as a go-between for a kidnap gang. Did a good business, but people don't like to see the star get killed at the end of a picture. Running time, 78 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong, Lila Lee—Very entertaining program picture, full of action and suspense. Drew only fairly well but only because there is very little money in this section.—Mrs. Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE STOWAWAY: Fay Wray, Leon Waycoff—No names in the cast that mean a thing. Very weak in directing and story also. The actors give amateur performances that make it a very poor picture. Not worth running.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

World Wide

SIGN OF THE FOUR: Arthur Wontner—Good picture. Poor sound. Not so hot at the box office.—N. S. Tronslin, Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. Family patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

A NEW YEAR AND A NEW DEAL!

EVERY TIME WE EMBARK upon the mysterious voyage of a new year it seems to be customary for each and every one of us to make up a batch of perfectly good resolutions, turn over a ream or two of new leaves and in general promise (or kid) ourselves into believing that we will never do anything that is not entirely on the up and up.

And, every time the New Year rolls around it is also customary for some dozen or two to solve the problems of the whole industry, regardless of how much or how little they know about it. So, taking advantage of the season and the freedom of the press, we'll offer our own solution for the ills of theatre operation insofar as it concerns the house manager.

FOR THREE SOLID YEARS we have sat in this spot and kept in close touch with conditions all over the country, especially the salary, budget and overhead slashing which all too often rebounded and cost the cutters far more than it cost the managers. For three years we have watched executives in home offices practice the most astonishing form of economy and long-distance theatre operating and wondered just how long it could continue before the tail would start wagging the dog.

To relate some of the things that have happened to such circuits and executives would be rehashing old stories which have gone the rounds so often that they are now too stale.

BUT, STRANGE TO TELL—or maybe not so strange at that—the funny practices continue and still the swivel chair gents are as far from the solution as when they started; only they are much poorer and much more worried.

We honestly believe that we can make a suggestion that will come a darned sight nearer the goal than any so far advanced, and risking the wrath of the powers that be we offer, for the benefit of those who are still capable of sensing a new slant, the following:

A BRAND NEW DEAL FOR THE MANAGER!

IN ADDITION TO THE present insufficient salary now being paid to the man charged with the responsibility of operating expensive theatre properties, the theatre owners shall permit him to draw a sum of between five and ten per cent of the net profits. Whatever the percentage agreed upon, there must be no double-crossing on either side of the fence. Owners must not pad the overhead or charge unreasonable sums against administration expenses, or charge the house exorbitant salaries for themselves.

On the other hand, the manager must operate the theatre as economically as is consistent with good showmanship and in keeping with the type of house he is managing. Setting a set overhead is the happiest medium providing it is a fair figure and one that would prompt the various managers to try to top week in and week out.

THE ONLY DANGER to this plan will develop among those theatre owners who have the unhappy faculty of welching on an understanding. They will try to do just that—or worse—just as soon as they see their theatres starting to make some real money. They may soon forget the past lean years and the worry that went with them and they will probably have mighty little compunctions about letting the manager have what he is justly entitled to.

You may well ask: "Is this an experiment?" IT IS NOT. It is a plan already in practice in some half dozen situations that we personally know of and has spurred the managers on to such extra effort that theatres under this plan have climbed slowly, but steadily, out of the red and into profits. Never have these managers been so happy, so anxious and so conscientious. You can easily understand why such fine spirit and loyalty should exist. These fortunate showmen are finding themselves for the first time perhaps, in a position to look a little ahead and save a few dollars.

WE'LL STAKE OUR LAST cent that if two groups of theatres were to line up against each other, one under the old chiseling system of salary cutting, meddling supervision and worries, and the other under the plan advanced here, whereby a manager is vested with the full authority so essential to proper management, left to work out his own problems and then allowed to share in the success of his efforts, that the latter group would leave the other so far behind that you'd soon lose sight of them altogether.

Conditions being what they are, you may say that I'm all wrong. Well, after all, so many others have been wrong that the least you can do is to let me be wrong for a change and see what happens. "CHICK"

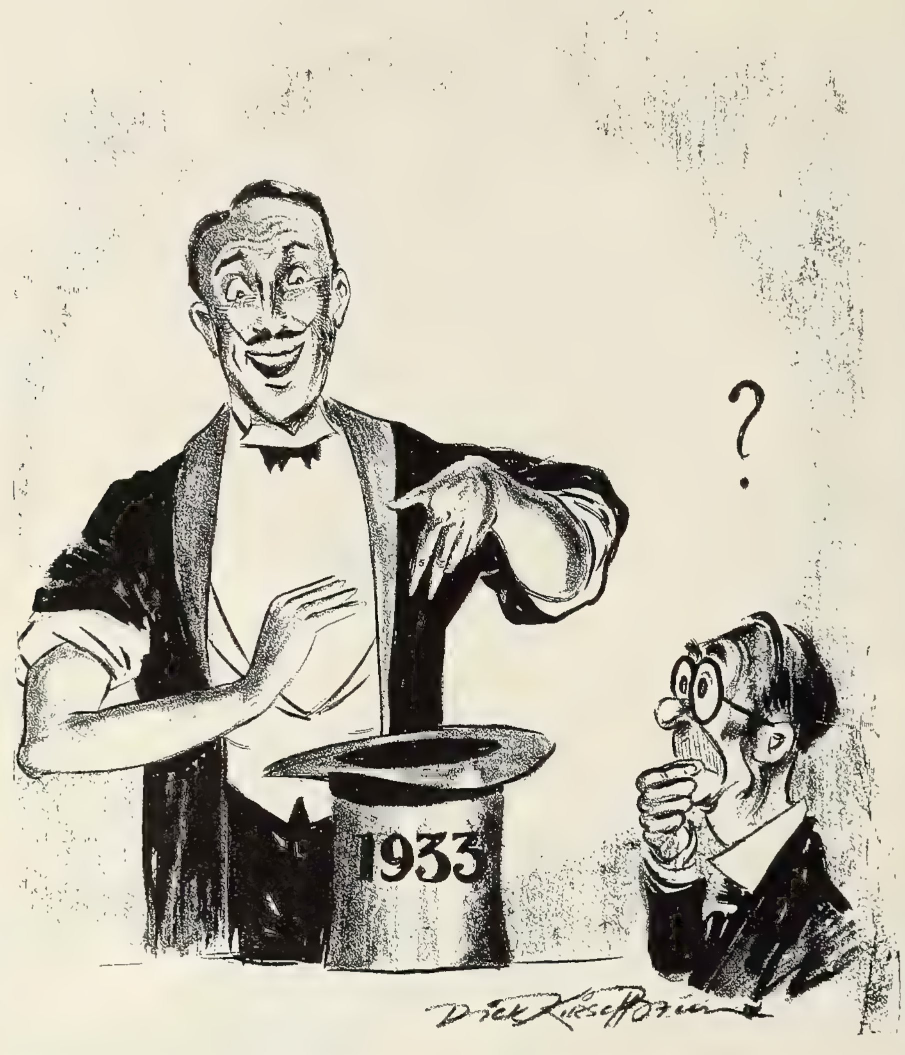
DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!



Your guess is as good as ours on what the Master Magician is going to pull out of the 1933 hat. . . . Maybe white rabbits, maybe not; maybe a lot of good news for all of us. Anyway, lets all give a rousing cheer for the New Year!

LORENCE DOING GOOD WORK AT STRAND AND CATARACT IN NIAGARA

When smart showmen meet they say something generally happens. We refer to a connection formed some time ago between the Brothers Skouras and Herman Lorence, which resulted in the latter being made manager of the Strand and Cataract Theatres, Niagara Falls, N. Y. 'Twas rather tough going when the energetic Herman first arrived on the scene, but hard work and logical thought and action have brought about improved conditions. Let's see what he has been doing.

On "Smilin' Through" he pulled a fast one between the hours of midnight and 8 A. M. by stenciling "Go Smiling Through to the Strand" on 200 street corners. And did he catch hell from the city boss and did he wiggle out of the jam! Go ahead—sue him!

He combed the entire neighborhood for all the trunks it could yield and piled them high in a stake-body moving van to exploit "Pack Up Your Troubles." The driver was dressed in a soldier's uniform. Both truck and driver looked like the tail end of the Battle of Bull Run, it is reliably reported, but commanded plenty of attention.

On "Rain" the 24-sheet was used for a cut-out across the marquee. The ingenious Lorence then placed the rain pipe over the top and turned on the water. That evening it rained as it hadn't rained in a long time. So what? Anyway, the gag helped matters along.

Another move that made rival exhibitors turn green with envy and him one of the immortals of showbusiness was a stunt on "Red Dust," when 100 pounds of sand was colored red and mixed with glue to identify trails to the theatre. It is not reported that the mixture stuck to the shoes of any of the good citizens, but what if it did? All the more publicity.

And so it goes with Lorence at Niagara. Now he's putting on prologues with each first half picture and so far hasn't spent a cent for talent. He and the organist dig it from midnight auditions. Lighting effects by Lorence; music by Miss Taylor. And what a combination!

If our Niagara representative can steal a few moments from the 16 to 20 hours he's putting in each day to keep his charges in the running, we'll promise to publish more of these disturbing incidents in his life. Till then we bid him and his fellow Club members adieux, with the sincere wish that his assault against the elements of Niagara meet with continued success.

FRISCH AND RINZLER AGAIN COME THROUGH WITH FOOD FOR POOR

For the third consecutive season Louis Frisch and Samuel Rinzler, heads of the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, N. Y., assisted the poor and needy of Brooklyn and Queens by staging their Annual Free Food Matinee. Newspapers, several charitable organizations and the untiring efforts of managers of thirty-odd theatres cooperated to make the event an outstanding success. To Monty MacLevy, former manager of the Savoy Theatre and publicity director of the circuit, now general manager of the Round Table Circuit, Long Island, goes a major portion of credit for bringing the affair to a successful conclusion.

More than 40,000 school children, after making requests to parents to donate foodstuffs in lieu of their admission to the theatres, stormed the circuit houses on the stated day. Throughout the afternoon groups arrived bearing in their arms all manner of canned goods, vegetables and other eatables, to be admitted to view complete shows. When all was accounted for some 40 tons of provender was on hand, with an approximate valuation of $25,000. Leading the list were pork and beans; next came thousands of cans of tomato soup, followed by such articles as rice, milk, all sorts of vegetables, etc.

As to gratitude, Protestant, Jew and Catholic enthusiastically voiced thanks through neighborhood welfare organizations and by direct letters to theatre managers and circuit headquarters at the Savoy. Frisch and Rinzler are in line for congratulations for sponsoring such a worthy move, as are their supervisors and managers for their part in the undertaking.

KEN WARD MANAGES TO KEEP HIS HOUSE ON THE FRONT PAGE

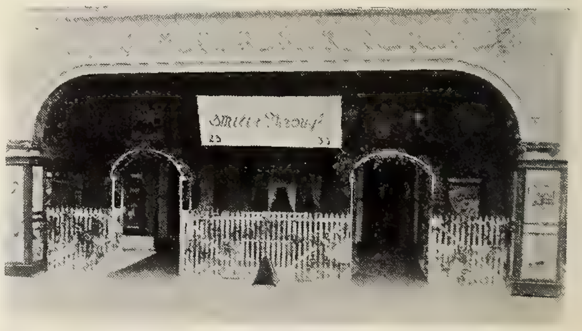
We see by the papers that Kenneth Ward, manager of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., among other things, acted as host to the City Fire Department, pulled a "Zombie" bravery stunt and promoted a full page co-op ad, to say nothing of constructing a handsome front for his theatre.

Kenneth tempted the jaded appetites of the fire crew and a number of invited friends with something new on Sumter menus—rattlesnake chops, whatever they are, and the innovation rated a two-column story on the front page. A good old chicken stew helped mollify his guests after identity of the side-dish was disclosed.

Another story contains the information that a shrinking little violet of Sumter's feminine element witnessed unattended a midnight showing of "White Zombie" without making any noise except that of opening her purse when Kenneth awarded her a $5 croix de guerre for distinguished bravery. There were lots of competitors for the chance to sit through the lone performance but Moore exercised his keen eye for feminine charm when making the selection.

He tied in the mis-spelled word gag when promoting the full page co-op ad on "Down to Earth." The title made a good one for "Down to Earth" prices and "Quality Up-Prices Down" catchlines and the merchants came through like a lot of good soldiers, not forgetting to let Kenneth place his good-sized display ad right in the centre of the page.

The illustration shows a front he constructed for "Smilin' Through," which to our way of thinking, is well nigh perfect for an open-faced lobby such as has the Rex. Note the attractive picket fence effect, foliage and the two arched entrances. It carried out the scheme of the gate sequence in the picture.



That's all for this time from Ward, the Rex and Sumter.

"TAKE OFF YOUR WHISKERS! We know you, Lionel Barrymore!"

With his magnificent performance in "Rasputin and The Empress" immortally recorded on film, this great actor begins work on a brilliant original story—one of the most unusual roles ever developed at the M-G-M studios. Title to be announced.

LOUIS LAMM FOUND STREET STUNTS AID ON THREE PICTURES

Recent campaign activities of Louis Lamm, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, tie-ups with the Legion and a transportation company and a stunt on "Grand Hotel."

The accompanying photo practically tells the story of the tie-up made with the American Legion on "Brown of Culver," in which a special show was designated as Legion Night. Members of the local post, followed by seventy-five Junior Patrol Boys of Elyria schools, paraded through the streets en route to the theatre and provided plenty of publicity.

For "One Way Passage" he formed a tie-up with a local bus concern to give patrons a free one-way ride to the theatre during the three-day engagement of the picture. Coupons published in the newspapers two days in advance of showing were accepted in lieu of cash by the bus drivers.

Effective publicity was given "Grand Hotel" by having a boy, dressed as a bellhop, pass out cards at prominent street intersections. Copy on the cards carried names in cast, with invitation for bearers to "spend two hours with them in 'Grand Hotel'—first time at popular prices."

We're always glad to hear from one of the Lamm Brothers of Ohio, for both Louis and Julius generally have some good stunts to pass along the line. This time thanks are in order for the former. We'll be telling you more about his work in a future issue.

WHEELER'S STUNT IS ADAPTABLE TO MOST ANY COLLEGE THEME

A stunt which C. W. Wheeler, manager of the Tokay Theatre, South Bend, Ind., used on "Hold 'Em Jail" ought to work out equally well on any football or college picture.

There are four high schools in his county and Wheeler offered cash awards to the students in all of them for the best "yell" containing "Hold 'Em Jail," the decision to be made by the school assemblies. On opening night of the picture the winners from each school appeared on the stage to give the "yells," typewritten slides of which were thrown on the screen. The winner was judged by audience applause.

Wheeler offers a post yell-stunt suggestion that the judges make the award on the basis of the way it is put over, for reason that one of the schools was situated in his town and its representative received a far better break than the others. However, it did help put the picture over.

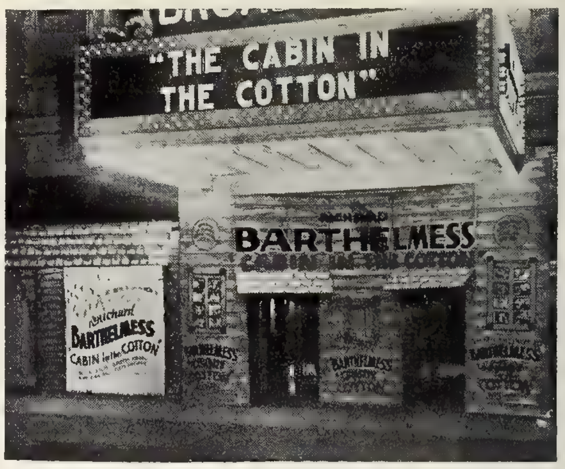
A FEW NOTES ABOUT WALTER MORRIS AND HIS CAROLINA HOUSE

The last time we reported on the activities of Walter Morris, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., we outlined the fine campaign he made on "Fugitive." Prior to this, however, he and his staff turned out an attractive front on "Cabin in the Cotton," a photo of which we are showing herewith. You will note that the entire entrance was boarded up to resemble the exterior of a cabin. The center window was used by the cashier, while the windows at either side made excellent frames for a variety of stills.

A copy of the High School bi-weekly newspaper discloses that Walter tied-up with the students and football players for an old-time Rally Night on occasion of showing "All American." Official autos and a band formed the vanguard of a parade of students and players en route from school to theatre. The band and football squad were guests but the student body paid (thank goodness, observes Walter) and furnished plenty of publicity and ballyhoo. The school paper carried the story on the front page under a streamer head.

Other activities in Charlotte include formation of "The Jester's Club," an organization composed of representatives from all branches of show business in the city, and the Broadway Theatre's Bosco Club, sponsored by a chain store company. The former will function as a social, fraternal and charitable body while the latter is a move aimed at promotion of goodwill and sales for both theatre and stores. The chain stores company is spending a considerable amount of cash to blanket the city with bread inserts, newspaper and window advertising.



Morris' activities are, as usual, interesting to us and his fellow Round Tablers. He gets around, does Walter, and does things that keep the name of the theatre he's connected with in the limelight. We'll hope to tell you more later about his tie-up with the chain-store concern, proving that cost of a large campaign can be promoted with a little effort.

Is This a "Ride"?

Eddie Golden, of the New Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., advises us via post card that he simply couldn't resist passing word along "that if managers want to do business on 'Tiger Shark' to cater to Catholics and play it on Friday (fish day)." He did, says Eddie, and packed 'em in. Further details are lacking. Figure this one out yourselves!

WHY DIDN'T WE THINK OF THIS BEFORE!

Every so often an inspirational teaming of players happens that makes us say "Why didn't we think of that before?" One reason is we didn't have a story like this one. But now we've got it—and you'll give out cheers!

What's good for the goose ought to be good for the gander but $7 seems to be a lot of dough on this fellow's weekly budget. Anyway, the big shot's telling him how to put over a hot stunt.

CALDWELL AGAIN PUT OVER FINE CAMPAIGN ON "HOTEL" PICTURE

Judging from past observations of his work, we could have told you all long ago that Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, would put over a big campaign on "Grand Hotel" and data at hand justifies our convictions. The usual, excellent Caldwell tie-ups, assuring wide coverage among various merchants, together with displays, newspaper campaign, free space, etc., are all in evidence.

The small cut on this page shows one of the attractive windows he secured as the result of a tie-up made with a big department store located in the heart of the city. Cutout "Grand Hotel" star heads were used as a background, with 14 by 17 de luxe colored star stills studded throughout the display. A large theatre card was devoted entirely to attraction and exclusive engagement.

Another tie-up made with a Macy-owned department store netted him 26-inch cooperative display advertisements in morning and evening newspapers, plus a display in the book department on the main floor. Announcement cards were read by the hundreds who patronize the huge dining room daily.

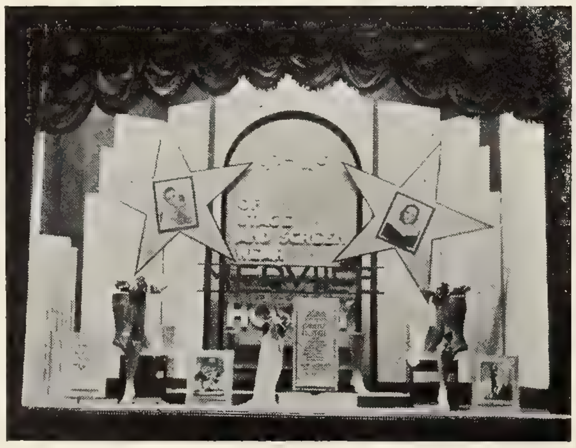
His windows included the placing of seven large oil paintings, prominently displayed, in downtown and west side stores; display of mounted 11 by 14's in special downtown locations; Postal Telegraph messenger cutouts in choice vacant stores, and a double set of "Grand Hotel" star stills with copy in an exclusive women's shoe store.

Additional effort included a tie-up with a leading hotel for a 10-inch display ad, plus paper books of matches with "Grand Hotel" stickers in all rooms and in coffee shop; the distribution by ushers of 5,000 Edison matches at prominent corners in the city during lunch hour and in well known stores; use of a one-sheet in the main entrance of another well known hotel; distribution of 200-sheet tack cards in all sections of the city and downtown parking spaces, and the distribution of 10,000 Loew's News in parked cars, laundry bundles and through residential sections.

All advertising, exploitation, etc., stressed the "exclusive run" of the picture and exclusive policy trailers were shown with current picture and coming attraction preview. As usual, Wally saw that the newspapers gave the regular quota of readers, special stories, etc.

Radio Stunt

A stunt called "Whispering Password," put over with the help of a local radio station, was instrumental in bringing about a lot of favorable publicity. Each night the radio station invited five of its listeners-in to witness the picture by writing a mentioned password, their name and address, on a card for presentation at the cashier's window. Five other "passwords" were mentioned for the next five days.



The marquee of the theatre was decorated with American flag clusters at each end; streamers and garlands were run to the roof; two 12-foot "Grand Hotel" plus, gold lettered drapes were tied to the bottom guy lines; large, transparent "exclusive showing" drapes were used on all sides of the marquee; star cutout heads were studded in front lobbies, together with special one and three-sheet poster boards, and oil paintings were spotted at advantageous locations in the foyer.

It's easy to conclude that Caldwell is still going about his work in the same old aggressive way, even when he has a strong attraction like "Grand Hotel." However, he has established a reputation out in Toledo for keeping Loew's Valentine up to the front and he doesn't necessarily lay down when a film comes along that needs but little pushing to get the desired results. We'll tell you more about Wally's work just as soon as we receive further news.

REESE BUILDING UP TRADE BY PLUGGING KIDDIE PATRONAGE

Believing that matinees for the youngsters account for revenue both from that source and adults who accompany them, W. Horace Reese, manager of the Spruce Theatre, one of the Harry Hirsch neighborhood houses in Philadelphia, makes a strong bid for kiddie patronage.

One of his methods of building kiddie trade is the "Free Show Club," whereby a bearer of a membership card provided with six punch-marks becomes entitled to see the seventh show free of charge. This same gag has also been used to hold up interest in the several chapters of a serial.

Popularity of "Lucky Bucks Play Money" with the children in his neighborhood also gave Reese an idea to capture attention from the youngsters. It appears that most of the Sunday papers print this "play-money" in a number of denominations and that the kids barter it among their gangs at the rate of one cent in cash per hundred "Bucks" for use in a variety of games and enterprises of their own invention. So Reese prints a somewhat similar bill on his heralds and other throw-aways with the greeting: "Hey Kids! Here's 50 Bucks for Your Bankroll—Extra! 100 Bucks Next Week—Don't Miss It." Copy pertaining to theatre and attraction is included on the play-money. He also adapts his heralds, etc. to the guest ticket scheme so that the bills will be kept instead of being thrown away. Announcements of those to receive passes are posted in the lobby.

Reese is doing a lot of interesting exploitation work in his neighborhood and now that he has joined the list of active contributors to this department we'll hope to tell you all a lot more about what's going on in showbusiness down his way.

Quaint Custom, Quaint Tie-Up!

The quaint custom of collecting matchbook covers is being capitalized upon by Warner-First National in mapping the campaign on "Match King." Strange as it may seem to some it appears there are a considerable number of entirely sane people who make it a hobby to collect an assortment of these bits of pasteboard. It is the idea of the exploitation wizards to present the "Warren William Silver Cup," this year's annual award, to the matchbook cover collector who submits the most interesting collection to his local theatre. Need we say more?

ASK YOURSELF THIS QUESTION; "DO PEOPLE READ YOUR ADS?"

Here Is a Valuable Discussion On the Question of Advertising Copy and Its Various Merits and Mistakes!

There Is Always Something New To Learn About Newspaper Theatre Ads; Here Are Some Excellent Tips!

by EDWIN S. C. COPPOCK

Managing Director, Staten Island Paramount

Advertising, because of its importance in show-selling, occupies the limelight of the Club section more frequently than any other medium. The reason is quite simple. The public has gradually grown more and more show-wise with the passing of years and as a consequence is shopping for its entertainment. What better or quicker method of shopping can it look to than newspaper advertising? So, just as the public is getting smart in reading theatre newspaper ads, the manager, too, has grown more intelligent in estimating the importance of this great selling medium.

But all too often the manager in writing his copy loses sight of many slants that must constantly be kept in mind while making up his ads. Mr. Coppock, a showman of many years' experience, understands the subject well enough to pass along these brief thoughts in the hope that other managers will grasp their signficance and be guided accordingly. And we too hope that every member and reader will give due thought to what is said in this very timely and pertinent article.

Other views, as we have often emphasized, are more than welcome on this same subject. Surely there are dozens of men in showbusiness whose long years of theatre operation and advertising work qualifies them to express themselves on the better ways of making up ads or warning you of the pitfalls wherein good copy ideas stumble and emerge as wasted money and space.

There is so much to be said on the better ways of making up ads, and so little has really been said, that we hope Mr. Coppock's efforts will result in many other articles from all over the country.

"CHICK"

ASK yourself this question. Maybe you have the right answer and perhaps you haven't. I didn't feel confident enough of my own precocity to make a decision so I sought the answer by means of a questionnaire. The result was somewhat surprising. Do people read?

Article after article on the Round Table pages have brought about the general assumption that the newspaper is a theatre's finest advertising medium. I agree entirely but deplore the possible misuse of the medium. Picture for yourself the seriousness of a situation wherein money and profit totaling many times a manager's salary can be controlled by his personal knowledge and use of a medium. He receives his show prepared by a studio spending huge sums in research and talent. His theatre is comfortable and adequately equipped. Yet through his own lack of perception all that expenditure may show a poor return.

Seeking the Medium!

In the questionnaire mentioned above I sought to find the medium that supplied motivation toward attendance at the theatre. Eliminating the majority of the questions and getting down to the point at hand brings up the matter of the average patron's selection of entertainment from the display advertising in newspapers.

The spirit of competition and the self-admiration typical of all of us has brought about a peculiarly inadequate type of newspaper advertisement. Our uppermost thought has been flash, smash, shock and attention value. Haven't you held out at arms length a finished ad and smirked with admiration of your own artistic achievement? Yes, it probably was a work of art. . . . so much so that business was lousy. People aren't reading a supposedly informative newspaper ad to complete their appreciation of art. They don't know what the word "layout" means, but they are prospective patrons of your theatre seeking information to assist them in making a choice. I'm as guilty as anyone else. Sure, I've made ads that I thought would steal any page. Consequently coming down to earth about these things was a shock.

There are lots of pictures that can be sold by the mention of title or star. But there are many times more that present a selling problem. No doubt there is something within those pictures that is fine entertainment. You know it's good, but how are you going to tell your patrons. Your patron doesn't have the advantage of constant producer shock advertising in trade papers. He doesn't have a stack of press sheets cluttering up his home. He depends on what you say in a newspaper ad.

In a community where the audience is largely made up of habitual patrons and not transients, your advertising is a service. The questionnaire showed that the majority of people influenced at all by newspaper advertising read the entire ad, small type and all. They are shopping. Don't ask them to buy blindly. Describe this merchandise for which they are going to pay hard earned dollars. You are so close to this business that naturally you have a sense of values. You know before a picture comes to your theatre whether it's good or bad. You know the story; you know the moral; you know the parts each performer plays, etc. You get so close to the product that you unconsciously treat it as a known subject. Your patron doesn't have these advantages. Yet he is anxious to find out all he can.

True enough, they read fan magazines. But what proportion of your audience reads them? A lot, to be sure, but not enough to pay your rent. Yesterday I spoke to a family about the picture "Payment Deferred." I asked them if they had seen it. Their answer was that it sounded like a story about installment buying. Absurd, but true. Those of you who have seen the picture know that it is a very fine piece of work. But did the title tell enough for you to know what it was about before you saw the picture?

Just Say Enough!

Many an old showman has said, "Don't tell 'em too much. Nevertheless if you told them so much that they stayed away, but believed your advertising, you have a better chance of getting them back into your theatre. Did it ever occur to you that possibly your patrons are as smart as you are and that they resent misinformation and that they can't continually be tricked into buying? In any community the difference between profit and loss is the amount of habitual patronage.

Patrons Are Choosy Today!

People DO read. Those people that are careful in their selection of entertainment, particularly where a number of theatres offer a wide choice, are the marginal income that may mean profit. Certainly it is better to do a job too well than incompletely. Give them pertinent copy not too full of superlatives. Stay away from the old stereotyped phrases. Every picture isn't the greatest ever made but it probably has something in it of value and interest. After the shock of finding from the questionnaire that patrons often stayed away and missed a picture they would have enjoyed merely because I had omitted in my ad copy facts that would have attracted them, I have tried to formulate a new plan of attack through the newspaper.

1. Smaller and more meaningful illustrations. Fewer clinches.
2. A headline that has punch that applies not to every picture, but to the one I'm selling.
3. At least 20 words of descriptive copy.
4. Listing a more complete cast.
5. More white space for readability.
6. Reduction in total display space.
7. Elimination of general superlatives.
8. Adequate space and descriptive line for ALL short subjects.
9. List starting times of feature.
10. Address and phone number of theatre.

Put away your conceit for a while. Don't try to outdue the other fellow in space. Make your ad easy to read by the elimination of needless novelty design and art work. And above all things tell 'em plenty with copy. They'll read it. To prove it to yourself run a few tests as I had to do before I was convinced that flash meant very little.

Offer a small premium written in small copy somewhere in the ad. Try a small story in the reader columns but BURIED. If that story mentions anything the people want they'll react. IN ANY COMMUNITY WHERE THE MAJORITY OF THE PATRONAGE IS HABITUAL, THEY DO READ . . . NOT JUST HEADLINES, BUT ALL OF YOUR COPY. Can any man with self respect and pride in his profession deliberately neglect his business by negligence in a subject wherein the result may be the difference between profit and loss and where the extra cost is NOTHING, merely the realignment of material and space already used?

WILLIE AND KELLEY WON FIRST HONORS FOR BEST CAMPAIGN

Basing their campaign on "use of something different every day to obtain definite results," which included a blonde versus red head contest, de luxe give-aways, a free vacation trip, special nights and other stunts, Raymond Willie, manager of the Texas Theatre, San Antonio, and Bob Kelley, advertising manager, came through to win first honors in the exploitation contest run several weeks ago by M-G-M on "Red Headed Woman."

Newspaper Tied-in!

The tie-up made with a local newspaper for a contest between red heads and blondes, based on the controversy caused by Jean Harlow dyeing her hair red, went over in a big way due to the whole-hearted support given the stunt by the paper. Tear sheets at hand bear evidence of the hundreds of inches of free space obtained by the theatre day after day during the campaign, including both straight stories and photos of the contestants. The award was an American Airways trip to Hollywood and return; a week at the Ambassador hotel there; luncheon with the stars at the Paramount studio; pictures made with stars, and a night dedicated to the winner at Cocoanut Grove. In addition to newspaper aid, this stunt was plugged over the radio, in lobby, in ads and on screen.

On opening night a new Ford V-8, promoted from a local dealer and plugged in the usual fashion two weeks in advance, was given away. A special lobby and orchestra pit display of the give-away was arranged at both Paramount and Aztec Theatres, with display cards by each car announcing the tie-up and give-away. Other effort in connection with the stunt included special radio announcements one week prior to give-away; a ballyhoo truck on the streets in residential and business districts one week in advance, with new Ford on appropriately bannered truck; large fire bell rung along the route followed by truck; ballots passed out from truck, and the listing of the give-away on 40,000 heralds distributed house to house four days prior to opening.

Willie and Kelley tied in with the local agent of a well known steamship line for the promotion of the three weeks' vacation trip to New York City and return to San Antonio, which included rail fare to Galveston and return; all expenses paid while in New York, such as hotel, sightseeing jaunts, etc. The stunt was plugged two weeks in advance with a fine window display, a screen trailer, lobby display and distribution of 40,000 heralds and 75,000 of the usual paper accessories necessary to handle a stunt of this sort. This give-away was made the third night.

The give-away of a large size Frigidaire was also promoted through a tie-up with a local dealer and award was made in the usual fashion on the fourth night of the engagement. It was plugged on the screen, in lobby, 40,000 heralds and 40,000 of the usual paper accessories.

Other Features

On the fifth night of the engagement "Old Favorite Night," or Revival Night, was the featured event, when all patrons of the last performance of "Red Headed Woman" were invited to stay and witness a revival of "Animal Crackers" without extra charge. This stunt was also plugged on the screen, in ads, stories, in lobby and on 40,000 heralds mentioned above. Business for the last show was increased about 50 per cent.

Snappy catchlines were used for all newspaper ads and in lobby, with the latter's pieces treated with white background, flaming red-head posters of Harlow and set-in of composite still panels. A special poster and still set piece was used in front currently.

Posting consisted of 35 three-sheets, five days in advance; use of 100 display cards on fronts of street cars, and use of 20 twenty-four sheet stands, sniped with bottom streamer on special events taking place nightly.

Two radio stations were used for a total of 15 daily announcements, started one week in advance and continued daily until the last night, and the event was further plugged on the screen with a regular trailer one week in advance; special trailer for nightly events, and via trailers in other Publix houses in the city.

To sum it all up, Willie and Kelley were the richer by $100 when M-G-M announced that their campaign won first award and it looks to us as though they did a mighty fine job. Apparently they're an able team and we'd like to hear a whole lot more about what else is going on down at the Paramount. What say, Ray and Bob? Keep in touch with the Club.

PEOPLE GAVE HEARTY RESPONSE TO O'BRIEN XMAS PLEA FOR KIDS

Under the direction of A. Frank O'Brien, general manager of Wilmer & Vincent Theatres in Reading, Pa., tremendous response from local citizens greeted his S. O. S. for toys, etc., to gladden the hearts of the poor and deserving children on Xmas Day.

The accompanying photo is misleading as to actual number of toys brought to the matinees by the more fortunate children in lieu of admission. Over 10,000 articles were collected and five army trucks were required to carry the toys from the Embassy and State Theatres to Relief Headquarters, where women donated their services to dress the dolls and put other articles in condition for distribution Xmas morning.

Following the Relief Committee's request for 500 additional toys after the first matinee was held, O'Brien immediately tied up with a leading local newspaper and front page stories produced more than the desired results. The Mayor, city officials, civic workers and members of the Relief Board made appearance at the theatre and pronounced the event the greatest thing of its kind ever put over in the city of Reading.

Congratulations to Frank O'Brien for his able handling of this gigantic toy matinee for needy youngsters and thanks to Paul Glase, manager of the Embassy, for his thoughtfulness in the matter of sending along the above photo and information. The W. & M. crew down in Reading are a busy and efficient group of showmen and we'll hope to let you all know more about their activities in weeks to come.

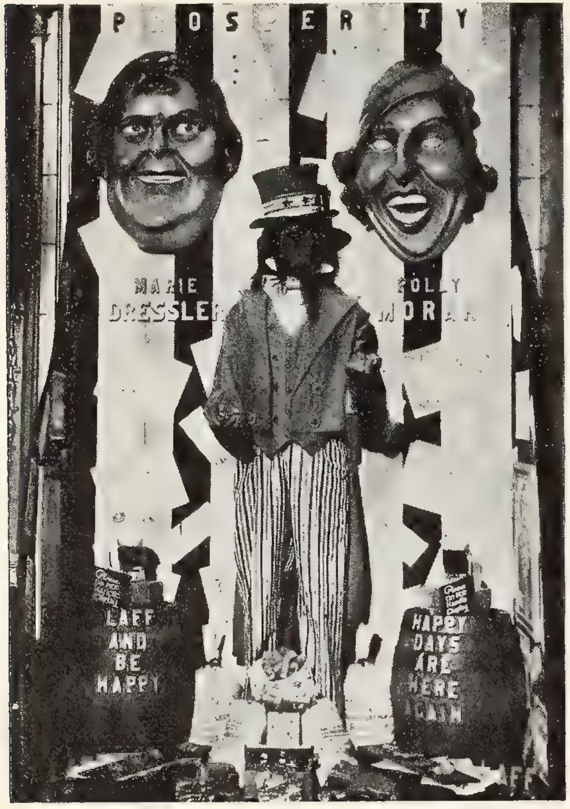
ATTRACTIVE LOBBY WAS HIGHLIGHT OF GILLMAN CAMPAIGN

One of the highlights of the campaign made on "Prosperity" by Manager S. A. Gillman and his staff at the Parkway Theatre, Baltimore, Md., was a colorful, attractive lobby display, a small photo of which we are showing herewith.

The backboard was striped in red, white and blue, as were the words "Prosperity" which appeared just above the heads of Dressler and Moran. At the feet of Uncle Sam was an open money bag, pouring out money made by slices of broom-stick handles wrapped in regulation money containers. The large gold nuggets in front of the money bags were pieces of coal painted with gilt. Beer kegs were promoted from a local brewery and the mugs full of near-beer were topped off with pieces of cotton to represent the old familiar foam. Regular exchange certificates, or "Prosperity" bonds, were pasted here and there on the back board and side wings and placed in two safe-deposit boxes. With a bright, white spot trained on the display the accessories looked so attractive that the staff had their hands full preventing people from carrying them off as souvenirs, so Gillman advises. Entire cash outlay for lobby only amounted to $4 for Uncle Sam costume.



Other Decorations

The lobby was further decorated by placing directly over the doorman's head at entrance doors a draped flag with copy of Prosperity picture in the centre. The 14 x 17 photos in neat frames were hung in various spots. Further use of the Prosperity Bonds was made by having two boys distribute them at the close of a High School football game and in the form of ribbon-tied packages "accidently" dropped in street cars and busses. A drug store, haberdashery and restaurant also aided with distribution of same.

Regular accessory Prosperity Stickers were also put to excellent use on taxicabs, empty store windows and 1,000 paper bags put in circulation by a haberdasher. Other effort, in addition to regular run of newspaper ads, readers, etc., included several mentions made gratis by a local radio broadcasting company.

In line with the announcement by M-G-M that awards are to be made for outstanding campaigns on "Prosperity" readers may expect other accounts from time to time. We wish Gillman and his crew luck with their entry. The entire staff deserve credit, he observes, from manager all the way down to porter.

RECIPE FOR A HAPPY NEW YEAR

Take twelve fine, full-grown months; make certain they are free from all memories of envy, bitterness, hate and jealousy; cleanse from them every clinging spite; pick off all bits of pettiness and littleness; in short, see that these months are freed from the past—have them as fresh and clean as when they first came from the storehouse of Time.

Cut these months into thirty or thirty-one equal parts. This batch will keep for just one year. Do not attempt to make up the whole batch at one time (so many persons spoil the entire lot in this way), but prepare one day at a time, as follows:

Into each day put twelve parts of faith, eleven parts of patience, ten of courage, nine of work (some people omit this ingredient and so spoil the flavor of the rest), eight of hope, seven of fidelity, six of liberality, five of kindness, four of rest (leaving this out is like leaving the oil out of a salad—and don't do it), three of prayer, two of meditation, and one well selected resolution. If you have no conscientious scruples, put in a teaspoonful of good spirits, a dash of fun and a pinch of folly, a sprinkling of play, and a heaping cupful of good humor.

Pour into the whole, love, ad libitum, and mix with a vim. Cook thoroughly, in a fervent heat; garnish with a few smiles and a sprig of joy; then serve with quietness, unselfishness and a Happy New Year is a certainty.

MAMMOTH CAMPAIGN WAGED ON PICTURE OF PIONEER DENVER

Because the story concerned Colorado and early mining days the world premiere of "Silver Dollar" was staged in Denver, at the Denver Theatre, a short time ago. The event made screen history as far as the city is concerned and a vast barrage of advance exploitation was laid down by home office officials, author of the story, Manager Jerry Zigmond, Publicity Director Richard Raub, and the rest of the Denver staff under the direction of J. L. Finske.

Six full pages of publicity, according to tear sheets at hand were handed out gratis by a leading paper, which printed the story serially three weeks in advance, ran a page of pictures in its roto section and featured photos of first night patrons on the society page the day following the premiere. The story of the premiere also made front page —an unprecedented occurrence in local newspaper annals.

With help of the Chamber of Commerce it was arranged for merchants to put on a "Silver Dollar" sale the day prior to opening. All ads tied-up the picture's title with store and merchandise. Merchants were enthusiastic over results.

Cashiers and ushers wore costumes reminiscent of the Tabor period (the Colorado miner who made millions and died a poor man) and tickets were made in the shape of a silver dollar, printed on silver cardboard. The theatre also cooperated with schools by admitting scholars at reduced prices.

Music Feature at Fox-Detroit

A good share of patronage which formerly hunted other sources of good music is now enjoying Sunday afternoon concerts by a 65-piece orchestra at the Fox Theatre, Detroit, according to a recent statement by Freddie Schader, publicity director. For regular performances music is supplied by the 20-piece Fox orchestra, singers and a F. & M. unit.

"CHENE" CHENOWETH IS VETERAN SHOWMAN TOO; SUBMITS DATA

Reference made some time ago in this department to advertising displays used a mere matter of 16 years ago brought a rise from H. A. "Chene" Chenoweth, manager of the Empire Theatre, Block Island, R. I., who forthwith submitted evidence of his own activities several years prior, when managing houses in New London and Thompsonville, Conn.

"Chene" is one of our veteran showmen and his old advertising matter and programs were very interesting to look over. While we haven't heard from him in some time we take it for granted he's still holding forth down on his island home, despite the fact showbusiness may be a bit off-season there right at this time of the year. The cod are running, anyway; eh "Chene"? When he starts up again we'll tell you more about what's going on down his way.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Ever since a youngster, Fred L. Bixby, former manager of the Kameo Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., and recently placed in charge of the Kameo at Lawrence, was strongly attracted to showbusiness.

Fred L. Bixby

While in college a chance came for him to work in the main office of a circuit theatre company, and prior to that he filled in time as an usher. Following these connections he worked up to an assistant manager's post at a theatre in Lynn, Mass. Then he became a manager and has held down jobs at the Franklin Theatre, Springfield; the Washington Theatre, Boston; the Park, Nashua, N. H.; the Park, Plymouth, Mass.; the Crown, Lowell, Mass., and the two theatres mentioned in the foregoing paragraph. He has dealt with both straight picture and combination shows.

Bixby was born in Salem, Mass., Sept. 17, 1909, educated in the public schools of that city and received a B.S. degree at Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me. He's in showbusiness for keeps, he advises us. Yes, girls, he's still single.

BROWN, MILLER AND HARDY TURNING OUT ATTRACTIVE LOBBIES

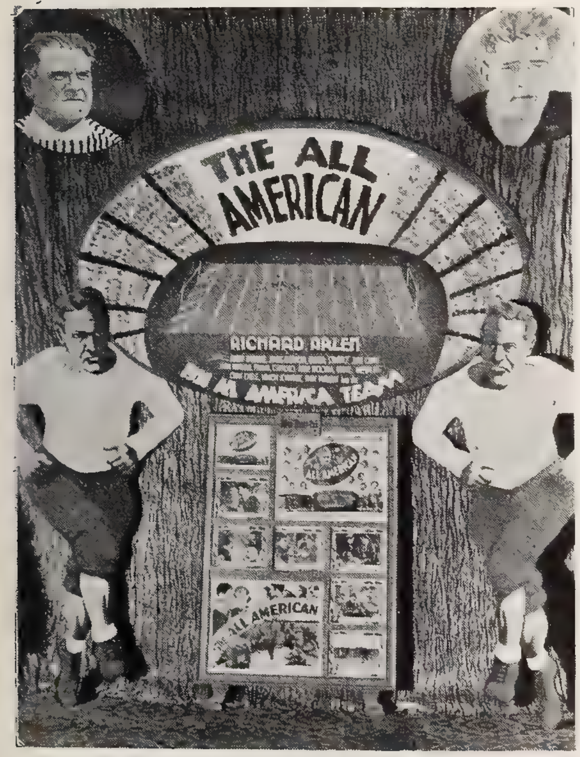
We've had occasion before this to present examples of the fine poster and lobby art work turned out by Harry E. Brown, manager of the Fox-Stanford Theatre, Palo Alto, Calif., in which he is ably assisted by Artist Kenneth Miller and Ray Hardy, in charge of maintenance.

This time we have for you a display made for "All American," which represents an eight-foot football with stadium and field backgrounds on the shoulders of two players. The main background was done in gold cloth. In the upper left and right hand corners are paintings of Ernie Nevers and "Pop" Warner.

We also note that the team of Brown, Miller and Hardy are turning out some attractive front banners, or curtains, by working with oilcloth of various colors. The cloth can be obtained quite cheaply when bought by the bolt and striking effects can be produced by using letters in sharp contrasting colors of flitter. Most anyone can block-in letters with glue and then sprinkle on the flitter, scallop the edges, baton the top and then have an attractive banner that will cover the front under the marquee. Brown's usually run about 14 feet by 3 feet. A sign on one reads: "This curtain will rise at 2:15 P. M."

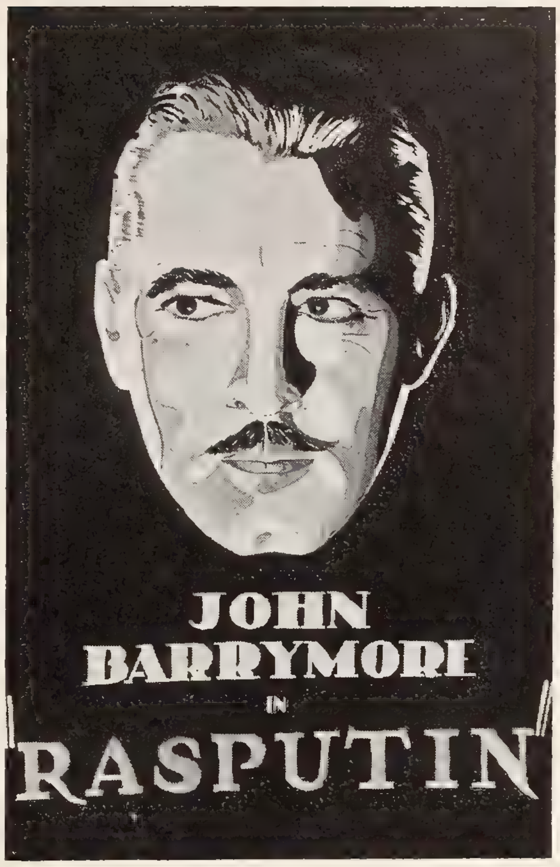
EFFECTIVE UNIT!

Brown and his assistants work as a unit and the combination has proven a profitable one. When they turn out material for a couple of lobbies it generally serves for four, by rearranging and retouching here and there and transferring the displays from inner lobby to outside. Miller is a young Palo Alto showman who is rapidly advancing in his chosen profession. Hardy is the lighting expert, technician and aids in building of all still and mechanical lobbies. Both are a decided asset to the theatre. However, we'll go on record in stating that Harry Brown can also think up a few ideas himself, although he modestly refrains from taking any credit. We'll hope to present further examples of their work from time to time.



POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Drawn by Donald Andorfer



Here is what we would term an unusual poster by reason of the contrasting solid black background which brings the features of the character so much to the fore. At least, that is the way we felt about it, so we asked two poster artists here in New York for their opinion and they were just as impressed with it as we were. So that made it unanimous.

It is the work of Donald E. Andorfer, poster artist for Fred Hinds at the Strand Theatre in Whitewater, Wis., and should definitely put to rest any idea that the best artists are all in the big key cities. We've already reproduced dozens of fine art examples from more smaller spots than all the key cities put together.

A certain amount of effectiveness is naturally lost in making a photo of the above poster because of colors that do not photograph accurately. Regular poster men will, however, take this into consideration before passing judgment. We trust they will number Donald's contributions among those worth using themselves.

SAN PEDRO HONORED DOC CREWS' THEATRE ON 10TH BIRTHDAY

The Chamber of Commerce and many individuals paid tribute to C. S. "Doc" Crews, manager of the Fox-Cabrillo Theatre, San Pedro, Calif., on occasion of the Tenth Anniversary celebration by supporting a 12-page Birthday edition of a paper, bearing a large photo of "Doc" himself on the front page and carrying in following pages enough advertising to gladden the heart of the hardest-boiled promoter.

All of which is a testimonial to the good work Crews has put forth while in charge of the Cabrillo. May he live long and continue to prosper! We'll hope to tell Club members more about this energetic showman's way of doing business, feeling sure that he has many ideas up his sleeve which will help all of us over the tough spots.

CLUB DETECTIVES FIND DICK WRIGHT; HE'S BUSY AS EVER

After losing track of Round Tabler Dick Wright, manager of the Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio, for a couple of months, we are pleased to report that Club sleuth-hounds have relocated him right in the same spot, busy as ever selling shows; in fact, he's been so darned busy that time just couldn't be found to gather material for a contribution to this department.

We hear that a "Used Garment" stunt, sponsored by the United Veterans Committee for benefit of all needy in the city, went with a bang and produced a lot of word-of-mouth advertising and good will for the Strand. This clothing matinee got under way at the theatre with a Friday show at 10 A. M., when patrons were admitted for some article of clothing. The newspapers backed up the move with a generous amount of publicity.

Both Wright and Frank King, the latter manager of the Colonial Theatre in Akron, have been tying in with a local newspaper on a classified page stunt, consisting of giving guest tickets to those sending in complete letters of a "mystery word" scattered among the ads on the page. Both houses netted a goodly amount of free space.

Looking over some data on Wright's campaign on "Tiger Shark," it's a foregone conclusion that Dick put in his time to excellent advantage by reaping a whole lot of free space, arranging ballyhoos and other exploitation. His efforts included construction of a most attractive front; stringing of a large banner across street by theatre; mounting of tire cover ads on fifty yellow cabs; walking bally of seven-foot giant in fisherman's coat; placing of dashboard cards on 65 street cars; distribution of special heralds via Liberty Magazine; circularization of hunting-fishing associations by special postcard; a newspaper gag for best fish story; classified ad page gag of missing word; news carriers guests of theatre at special matinee, and a strong newspaper advertising campaign.

All of Wright's fellow Club members will appreciate his suggestions outlined above, we're sure. We understand he recently put over a corking campaign on "I Am A Fugitive," and will be on watch for detailed information. Just as soon as we receive it, his plan will be passed along the line.

DIGNIFIED NOTE IN STAGE WEDDING THAT ED RIVERS PROMOTED

A stage wedding planned to dignify and solemnize a stunt which otherwise might offend church members and the more straight-laced people of the community was successfully staged by Eddie Rivers, manager of the Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho, recently.

After arranging the usual merchant's tie-ups, which included a score of presents for the bride and groom and a full-page newspaper co-operative ad, Eddie then busied himself to secure the proper atmosphere for the affair. But before we go into that, take a glance at the co-operative ad he promoted among the several merchants who helped make the affair a huge success. A nice ad for the participants and a good break for the theatre and current attraction, to our way of thinking.

A huge electric cross with three colors of lights on dimmers was borrowed from one of the churches for use on the stage. A local florist was then contacted to elaborately decorate the stage in return for the advertising value it offered him.

Society debutantes were secured to act as bridesmaids and their escorts, in Tuxedos as honorary ushers. The affair was made as formal as possible with plenty of Tuxedos and evening gowns in evidence and the bride's gown fashioned in formal fashion.

Music was furnished by one of the churches, which included a soloist. After the ceremony a wedding march down the aisle, and the bride and groom were shot into a Yellow Cab to ride through the downtown section several times with tin cans, old shoes, etc., tied to a taxi bearing banners, "Just Married," etc.

Rather than present the many gifts from the stage, Rivers printed a special program, listing the donors, and giving the bride's and groom's name, etc.

Rivers declares that to follow the solemn ceremony by awarding the presents from the stage would destroy the solemn and dignified atmosphere which has been so carefully built up and give the rah-rah portion of the audience too much opportunity to start throwing rice and old shoes and, possibly, creating a burlesque atmosphere. This is Eddie's fourth stage wedding, and in his opinion his most beautifully staged and successful so far.

JAY'S

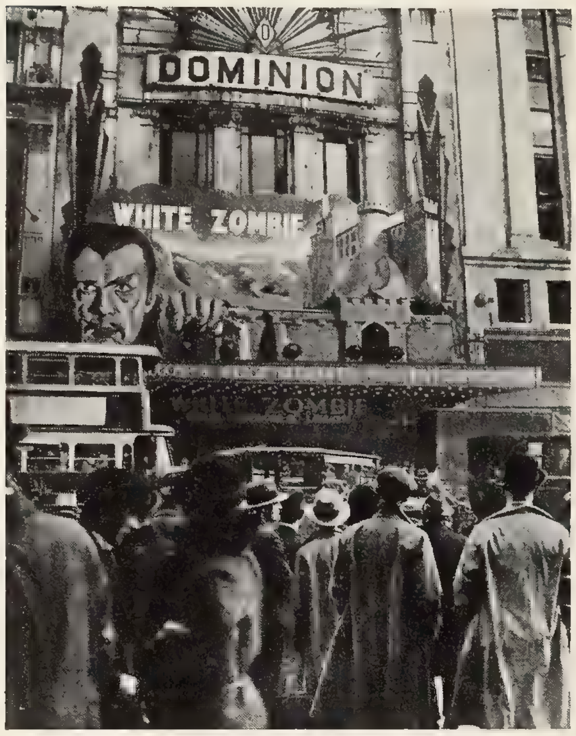
A stage wedding is a sure business getter at any time if handled properly, Rivers believes. He billed his as a "Mystery Stage Wedding" and covered the business houses with small window cards a week ahead bearing the following copy: "What prominent local couple will be married at the Granada Mystery Wedding on Friday, September 9th," with a big question mark covering a third of the card.

Two thousand invitations, printed in script and on bristol stock, costing but little, were distributed to patrons at the two preceding shows to advertise the affair.

He thinks it advisable to pick a suitable picture, with a title not only fitting the occasion, but also of a good, wholesome family type of entertainment. Many church people and others not classed as regular showgoers are attracted to a stage wedding and nothing should be screened to offend their taste, but rather an opportunity is presented to entertain and make regular film fans of such people, he points out.

Incidentally, Eddie is a former chain circuit employee who tired of the "rules and regulations" brigade and went into business for himself seven years ago, and who has never regretted making the change.

"ZOMBIE" IN LONDON



Pictured above is one of the features of the campaign made on "White Zombie" by Robb Lawson, of the Dominion Theatre, London, England. Five "Zombies" enacted a scene in front of the 40-feet high display depicting "The House of the Living Dead." Box office records for the past six months were broken during run of picture.

Unemployment Gag!

The management of Loew's Broad Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, convinced a local newspaper that it would be worthwhile for all concerned to run a cooperative ad tying up an offer of guest tickets to anyone responding to one of the "wanted" ads in the classified section of the paper. The paper ran a deep 2-column display announcement in the news section and a boxed 2-column notice on the classified page.

WE PREDICT TAYLOR WILL BE VALUABLE ADDITION TO CLUB

Like a lot of other managers, who feel that they must put over some sensational stunt to become a member of the Round Table Club, Kenneth Taylor, manager of the Strand and Ritz Theatres, Uvalde, Texas, waited until he had something to his liking before giving us a flash. We won't engage right now in an argument on what it takes in exploitation and advertising to crash the columns of this department but will confine ourselves to the statement that a few snapshots, two of which we are reproducing herewith, disclose that Taylor should have joined this outfit long ago.

Any person who caught an eyeful of his ballies on "Tiger Shark" and "Cabin in the Cotton" and didn't get a kick out of them ought to be put in the old people's home. The former consisted of a fisherman's sharpie, fisherman and marine props of alligators and a big garfish. The man had his line hooked to the mouth of the gar, just as though he was trying to land the huge fish. The sides of the truck, as you may see, were strikingly bannered with copy pertaining to picture, star and theatre.

How do you like the one on "Cabin?" Neat, eh, with the old plantation hut and negro characters? There was a piano inside the cabin and the negroes played and sang as the bally wended its way around town. After serving as a bally the cabin was brought in and built around the box office. Plenty of cotton—real cotton, by the way, was also in evidence.

We think we've already conveyed the impression that Taylor will become a valuable member of this Club and if we haven't, we'll make the statement right here. His boss, H. W. Little, also operates a chain of wholesale groceries and being too busy with that end put Kenneth on the job to take care of his two houses. Trade right now does not permit opening the Ritz, so he's concentrating on the Strand. Ken worked in a bank for a year, took a fling at clerking in a hotel for a term and then joined up with Mr. Little. He likes showbusiness, and we think showbusiness will be kind to him.

ENGLISH TRADE GOOD SAYS GEO. ROBINSON, BUT NOT MANAGEMENT

Following return to England, his native land, George Robinson, former manager of a number of theatres in California, advises the Herald that business in general is in far better shape over there than here. Showbusiness, it appears, is included in his optimistic survey, 'though from an article which he wrote for "Cinema," an English publication, theatres are differently conducted in London and environs. With his permission and giving due credit to its source, read his diatribe on the system he claims exists in his home city:

> "Visit from George E. Robinson, erstwhile manager of several cinemas in California, who has come back to his own country. Conditions, he thinks, are better in England than in America, although he considers that British cinemas are not run so well. In America the rule is that the patron is always right, but he has not found any corresponding idea in England.
> "Tells me that in one cinema over here he told the doorman that there was a lot of ground noise, and the doorman replied 'I have nothing to do with that.' 'You are working for the house?' replied Robinson. 'My place is in the front of the house,' said the doorman. 'Isn't it your place to report a fault if a patron tells you about it?' 'I don't care a d——,' replied the doorman.
> "At another house he found the picture flickering so badly that it was painful to look at it. It took him 20 minutes to get a word with the manager, who simply told him he could not be bothered about it.
> "Both those houses lost a potential future patron. That's not the way to keep business—I quite agree with Robinson about that. Every member of the staff should treat every patron who takes the trouble to make a complaint politely, and should pass the complaint on to the right quarters; and the person responsible should see that the defect is remedied.
> "For one person who takes the trouble to make a complaint there may be a hundred who are dissatisfied but say nothing about it. Instead of regarding a patron who makes a grumble as a nuisance, a cinema proprietor should be grateful to him or her for bringing the grievance, whatever it happens to be, to the notice of the house."

At the risk of becoming involved in an international dispute and disruption of friendly relations among London and New York film circles, we're rather inclined to side with Showman Robinson's criticism of discourtesy at the theatre door, or, elsewhere, for that matter. At the same time neither do we approve of the ultra-unctious behavior of some of our theatre attendants over in this country. A happy medium of courtesy would seem an objective worthy of consideration. As to complaints, that old ruling of the customer generally being "right," is a pretty good one to follow in most cases.

Above is a reproduction of the fine double truck co-op ad that "Once in a Lifetime" inspired F. F. Vincent, exploitation man for Lou Metzger's Spreckels Theatre, to promote. All the several ads stressed the fact that only "once in a lifetime" came an opportunity such as this to buy the listed merchandise.

REOPENING OF HOUSE GAVE DELIS A CHANCE TO PROMOTE CO-OP AD

A short time ago we announced that George Delis, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, had been appointed manager of the Palace Theatre there by A. G. Constant, well known operator of theatres in Steubenville and East Liverpool.

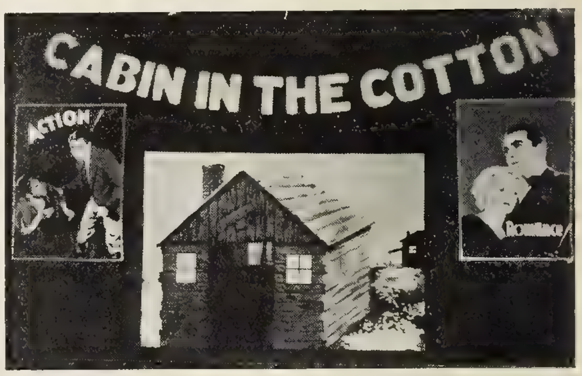
A newspaper tear sheet at hand discloses that Delis didn't lose any time getting under sail. Practically a full page of ads from local merchants testified their enthusiasm on occasion of reopening the house to the public, in which the Palace ad was the centre of attraction.

Good luck to Constant, Delis and assistant manager Keith Chambers with their latest enterprise. The Palace is described as a "Million Dollar Institution," so attainment of what they all seek will not be handicapped from lack of a fine house. We'll depend upon Delis and his associates to come through, and to keep the Club informed on what they're doing.

CONLEY AND KIPPEL MADE FINE DISPLAY ON "CABIN" PICTURE

Attractive, ingenious displays on "Cabin in the Cotton" are not by any means confined to our Club members below the Mason-Dixon Line, according to a photograph we have at hand of one made for the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., by Larry Conley and Mickey Kippel.

The windows in the large cabin were all transparent and lighted from behind, as was the smaller cabin in the background. There's a moon back of the chimney, whether you can see it or not, and the cotton at either side was the real McCoy. A phonograph hidden in the rear of the mezzanine played a continuous record of negro melodies sung by the Hall-Johnson choir. In addition, the ten posts in the large lobby were draped with transparent silk cloth, lighted from behind. Black cutout flitter letters of the ten most important players in the picture were placed on the cloth.



While the small photo reproduced here does not do justice to Conley and Kippel's display, it will serve in a way to give their fellow members an idea of how it looked when set up in the Stanley's lobby. We've already published several accounts of interesting work done on this picture and their work appears to rank with the top-notchers.

BASKET NIGHT GROWING POPULAR!

Here's one engineered by Russell Cohen out on Long Island.

He tied up with a local grocery store and boomed business on an off night by distributing several dozen baskets of groceries. All items were standard, advertised numbers, and amounted to not less than a dollar and a half in retail value.

While this thought is not unlike the turkey giveaway mentioned elsewhere in this issue, the object of the Basket Night is to build up over a definite or indefinite period some off night that can stand some help.

Cohen selected one of the toughest nights of the week, Saturday, because the night business on that particular day has never been any too good due to so many people driving into Jamaica, some fifteen minutes from town, for their shopping and theatres. He reports that business has increased each week since the idea was inaugurated, three weeks ago.

ZIMMERMAN DOUBLED MONDAY NIGHT GROSS WITH CO-OP AD PLAN

Monday night patronage has been doubled as the result of a cooperative advertising plan put into effect several months ago by M. A. Zimmerman, manager of the Portland Theatre, Casselton, N. Dak.

His stunt is known as "Booster Night" and came about through stepping up the number of slide advertisers from four to fourteen. The merchants were sold the idea of handing out a "Booster Ticket," good for admission to the theatre on any Monday night, with every purchase of one dollar's worth of merchandise. Zimmerman asked them to try the scheme out for two months before passing any judgment and at the end of that time only two were dropped from the list of 14 stores.

The deal works out to excellent advantage for the merchant when a customer purchases some article at a price less than one dollar, thereby giving the merchant a chance to induce the sale of some other piece of merchandising through offer of the special theatre ticket. Zimmerman failed to note what his regular admission amounted to so our readers' guesses are as good as ours. We'll gamble it's not very far away from the 20 cents stipulated on the Booster ticket and that his advertising revenue plus the 20 cents nets the house a good profit.

He advises keeping a check on stores to find out if any merchant is giving tickets with less than a dollar's worth of merchandise. One of his advertisers did that some time ago and the infraction was called to Zimmerman's attention by seven others inside of one hour on a certain morning. They threatened to discontinue the deal unless the offending merchant stopped his practice at once. After being told he would be checked off the list this particular storekeeper turned out to be one of the best boosters of the lot.

One other theatre man in the State, according to Zimmerman's estimate, is also using the above plan and is likewise reaping excellent returns from anotherwise off night. A number of requests have come in to M. A. for information on the stunt and he's taking this means to pass it along the line.

He is peculiarly situated out his way and if any of our members can suggest a method to improve matters we're sure he will appreciate the act. Casselton is located about 22 miles from the city of Fargo, where two large chain houses offer special inducements to out-of-town patronage. There are also three second-run independent houses in Fargo which charge from 10 to 15 cents admission. While Sunday shows are taboo in North Dakota, Moorhead, Minn., just across the river from Fargo, is within the law and takes many a patron there on Sundays. Hard-surfaced roads connect Casselton with both of the larger cities and theatre ads especially directed to out-of-town patronage and the lure of large department stores has brought about quite a serious problem for Zimmerman to cope with.

What To Do?

What to do about it? Maybe some of his fellow Round Tablers can offer some good suggestions. Now don't all answer "repeal the Sunday law!" That's a big order. However, we venture to state that there are many others in this Club who have faced with the same situation and evolved some plan to cope with it. How to hold 'em in town is apparently the question. Maybe considerable institutional selling; re-vamping of a booking situation which allows even competition with the de luxe house on that scale; careful building of programs; a carefully worked out cooperative campaign between theatre man and merchants, etc., etc. C'mon, fellows, let's have your ideas on the subject.

A BIG FLASH!

SIGN OF THE CROSS
CECIL B. DeMILLE'S

When Cecil DeMille's opus "Sign of the Cross" opened at the Rialto, New York City, the Busy Corner was the center of a vast blaze of electric illumination cast from the big signs on marquee and front. Duke Wellington engineered the display; Louis Nathan took the photo.

Above is a photographic reproduction of what Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, describes as one of the finest fronts ever built in his city. "Smilin' Through" was the subject and the work was engineered by Manager Harry Black, of the Capitol Theatre, and his Scenic Artist, Herbert Hahan.

CINCINNATI TRANSFERS

Recent closing of the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, brought about the following changes among RKO managerial ranks: Harry Schrieber, manager, and Horace Wersel, assistant manager, of the Capitol, have been transferred to the Grand in same capacities; William Dodds, former manager of the Grand, succeeds Lew Pressler as assistant manager of the Albee, and Erwin Bock, lately in charge of the State Theatre, Dayton, has gone back to his old job as assistant manager of the Lyric.

H. LASHLEY GAMBLED ON FOOTBALL HERALD AND WON HIS POINT

Without a doubt, H. T. Lashley, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C., is a bit of a gambler, as are the majority of fellows who make showbusiness their means of livelihood.

Ten minutes before the football game deciding the state championship between Furman University and University of South Carolina came to a close he distributed a quantity of heralds carrying the following copy: "We Told You So!!!—Furman Wins!—And Now Here's Another Good Tip! Go To See The Great Football Epic —'The All American'—Carolina—(Dates, etc.).

'Course Dick had the bills printed up before the game; however, he didn't gamble a whole lot with the printer for he stipulated no pay if Furman lost the game. "Believe it or not," states Lashley, "U. S. C. was expected to win that game."

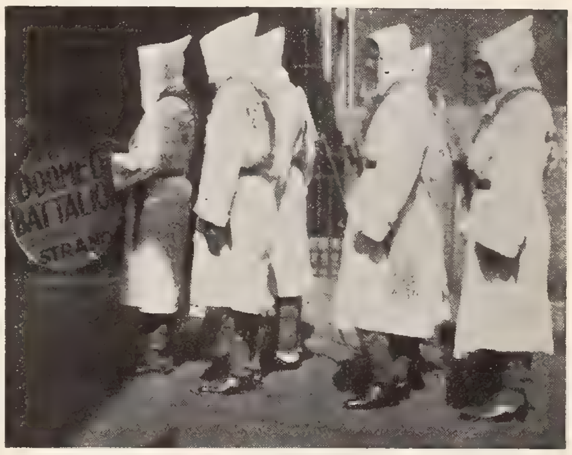
Newspaper clippings at hand bear evidence that Lashley and the Furman team hit it up pretty well during the season. It was seen to that the squad had a look-in each week at pictures and a grand finale was staged for the champions when "All American" was shown at the theatre. All the players were introduced from the stage and the 40-piece Furman Band furnished music for the occasion.

All of which garnered considerable newspaper and word-of-mouth publicity for our good friend Dick, to say nothing of further cementing the good will he has been building between school and theatre.

Before we sign off, let us note that he chiseled a large display ad out of a local paper because that newspaper regularly ran the Will Rogers syndicated matter and because of the appearance of Rogers in "Too Busy To Work" at the Carolina. For anyone similarly situated this tie-up is one of those "naturals" that shouldn't be overlooked. Okay to this Round Tabler and more power to him for the effective work he's doing down in Greenville. More concerning his activities at a later date.

Dick and his gang are always on the job down in their city and we feel sure that we can count upon all of them to furnish their quota of useful information to this department.

SHANGHAI BALLY!



Showmen in Shanghai, China, ballyhooed "Doomed Battalion" by having a squad of men march through the streets with banners on their backs and drum in hands of the leader. An appropriately bannered armored car with gun turret also proved an effective means of attracting attention.

ROBERT ETCHBERGER

has the job of assisting Don W. Ross with management of Loew's Regent Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., and we're also glad to record his name among the many assistant managers already enrolled in the Round Table Club. We had a line on Etchberger when he was associated with Loew's Stanley Theatre in Baltimore, where he worked his way up the ladder from an usher's job to chief usher and assistant manager. At the rate this young showman is plodding along it certainly won't be long before he'll be up another notch. Ask your boss, Bob, to let the Club know what's going on at the Regent.

manages the Atlantic Theatre for the Dean Amusement Company over in Brooklyn, N. Y., and he's another recruit for our large and ever-growing army of theatre managers. Louis was formerly manager of the Terminal Theatre, another Brooklyn house, and is a seasoned showman. The fellows still do some exploitation work across the Bridge and we'll hope to get a line on the brand being turned out by Liss. We'll be checking up on you, Louis, so get busy and shoot in some ideas for us to pass along to your brother Round Tablers.

is located down in the popular resort city of Asbury Park, N. J., where he manages the Rialto Theatre. We are also in receipt of his recent application for membership in this great army of showmen and want him to know that we're mighty glad to record his name among the rest. Next time you write the Club, Howard, let us know how things are down in Asbury, and include a report on that last exploitation stunt that helped boost the box office. The rest of the gang will be waiting to hear what you're doing, so shoot your ideas along.

manages the Fox-Lincoln Theatre out in Charleston, Ill., and he's another Fox-Midwesco man to become a member of this ever-increasing organization of showmen. Mike admits that he's been reading Club pages in the Herald every week and that just plain everyday neglect in the matter of sending in his application has kept his name from appearing among the weekly crops of new members. Okay, Mike, better late than never; let's hope you make up all the lost time by shooting along a little information on what's going on out in your theatre.

JENNINGS McDONALD

is another recent addition to the constantly growing ranks of this large army of showmen and he works for Publix down at the Ellanay Theatre in El Paso, Texas. McDonald is twenty-four years of age and has been in showbusiness for the past five years, having served his time under Dent Theatres, Inc., and Publix. He started in as usher, worked his way to doorman and assistant manager at the Ellanay and has pinch-hit as manager of the Palace and Wigwam Theatres in El Paso. At present he is acting assistant at the Ellanay. Mack has a flair for publicity stunts and we believe we can look forward to some interesting contributions from him in the near future.

is in charge of the film distribution department of the Peacock Motion Picture Company, Inc., of Shanghai, China, and we are glad to welcome him as a new member of this international organization of showmen. He takes care of all booking of American and British pictures for the thirty-odd houses under his company's control and ought to be in a good position to contribute a lot of interesting news of what's going on in showbusiness over in his section of the world. Foreign exploitation of pictures is always interesting to our many readers and we'll be on the lookout for photographs and detailed information of campaigns.

GENE PARRISH

is assistant manager of the Tennessee Theatre, a house operated by Valatenga Theatres in Knoxville, Tenn., and we're mighty glad to list his name among this week's new members. He is heartily in accord with the work being carried on by this department and proposes to do his share of it in the future. Gene sends us word that Harry Hardy is now city manager for R. B. Wilby in Knoxville. Our best wishes to him and ask him to drop the Club a line once in awhile, if he can find the time after looking after three houses!

is the skipper of the Fox-Whiteway Theatre out in Fredonia, Kansas, and we're happy to record that he, too, has joined the fastest stepping army of showmen in the world. He has found this department profitable in the past and now wants to help keep the ball rolling along by contributing some accounts of his own experiences in the show-selling game. Okay, LaSalle, shoot along your ideas. We'll see that the other fellows are tipped off.

manages the Caldwell Theatre in St. Joseph, Mich., and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his brother showmen in this organization. Welcome to the gang, Woodruff, and now let's see what you can do to help carry on the work being done by this department. What was that last stunt you used to good success at the box office of the Caldwell? Jot down an account of it and shoot it along for the benefit of your fellow members.

hails from out in Marysville, Kansas, where he manages the Fox-Liberty Theatre for Fox-Midwesco, and a cordial welcome is also extended this member of our organization. There's a large flock of Fox men listed in the Round Table Club and a majority of them have been steadfast contributors to this department. Let's hope that Stewart will strive his best to keep up the standard set by brother managers on his circuit.

confesses that he's been using a number of the show-selling ideas contributed by other Round Tablers and forthwith sends along his application for membership in the organization, with the determination to now do his share of the work being carried on by this department. He owns and manages the Silvertown Theatre, Thomaston, Ga., a house that has everything in the way of modern equipment. We're glad to welcome him into the fold.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The local theatre situation seems to have straightened itself out, temporarily at least. Oriental is definitely set as the long run B & K loop picture house. United Artists and State-Lake reopened Christmas, the latter with a straight picture policy. There only remains the question of what will be done with McVickers, the lease on which is not being renewed by Balaban & Katz. The house is owned by Publix and B & K has been subleasing it.

Two well-known local personalities have entered the state rights field. Ben Serkowich, until recently with Balaban & Katz, has acquired eastern rights for "The Big Drive," the A. L. Rule war film which created such a sensation at McVickers. Madeline Woods, who for many years has had charge of publicity and advertising for Great States Theatres, has acquired a number of middlewest states for the same picture. Serkowich left for New York last week.

J. E. Williamson, producer of "With Williamson Beneath the Sea," made a personal appearance at the Castle theatre in connection with the opening of the picture there December 25. Henri Ellman of Capitol Film Corporation, distributor of the film in Illinois and Indiana, announces that it is set for a long run at the Castle.

Of interest to exhibitors is a device described by Dr. William Feinbloom of New York at a convention of optometrists at the Palmer House last week. This device, a new type of telescopic lens, will enable persons with only two per cent vision to enjoy motion picture shows. A quarter million people or more will be able to use the new lens viewing picture shows, Dr. Feinbloom declared.

Yule parties at theatres about town for children and unfortunate adults was the order of the past week. Practically all the Balaban & Katz houses cooperated with the Chicago American in a series of neighborhood matinees while many other houses cooperated with local organizations in spreading Christmas cheer in their communities.

Ed Lowry, who has been holding forth as master of ceremonies at the Oriental, has been shifted to the Chicago theatre.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

Paul Ash & Orchestra

New York Capitol

After an absence of two years from Broadway, Paul Ash returns better than ever. His orchestra is composed of a group of accomplished musicians and entertainers. Prominent among them is Hal Menken, the guitar player, whose stair dance drew a resounding reception. The versatile orchestra modulates from the melodic "Play Fiddle Play," to the syncopated "St. Louis Blues," with ease, offering a full twenty minutes of entertainment. Jerry Frank and Julia Brennan also share in the applause for their novel bit entitled a "Radio Romance." This act rates on top.—H. P.

Horace Heidt and His Californians

San Francisco Golden Gate

Varied and spirited stage fare is offered, ranging from the "Dance of the Hours," with special effects, to "Schnitzlbank," in which the audience joins. Those in the first row receive pretzels and something that looks like beer.

COMEDY

Claude and Clarence Stroud

Buffalo Buffalo

These identical twins act as joint masters of ceremonies for the show titled "Sweet and Lovely." Their flow of fast wit may be a heritage from their recent sojourn with Earl Carroll's "Vanities"; but wherever they got it, it is novel and surefire. Their dance number brought great applause and they also used Peggy Chamberlin as a stooge to good advantage.

Dick Henderson

Baltimore Hippodrome

A comedy monologue is offered after Henderson enters singing from the wings. He has a manner of cracking jokes and then offering asides about their reception which draws laughs. He finishes with singing "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" to good applause. The audience was small but he gradually warmed them until they were laughing heartily.

Teddy Joyce

Buffalo Buffalo

Acting as master of ceremonies for the "Hollywood Fun Jamboree" revue, Joyce displayed versatility as violinist, dancer and gagger, and won the audience from the start. Joyce could have had all the applause he wanted, but preferred to keep things moving at top speed, building up the applause for other acts.

Kirby and Duvall

Baltimore Hippodrome

Comedy and songs are offered in an entertaining manner that proved successful with the audience.

Copyright Music Issue in Canada

The right of a theatre to show a film in which is reproduced a copyrighted song for which the theatre has not obtained the performing rights is at stake in injunction proceedings currently before the superior court in Montreal.

In the action the Canadian Performing Rights Society, Ltd., asks the United Amusement Corporation, Ltd., be restrained from using parts of a musical number as part of the orchestral accompaniment in the film "Blondie of the Follies." The society is copyright owner of 3,000,000 musical numbers and had requested 10 cents per seat per year from the theatre company for use of the entire copyright list in its Montreal theatres. The theatre owners had refused, but had offered five cents per seat per year.

The circuit contends that an injunction was an improper proceeding; that the proper procedure required the society to bill the theatre owners for the license fee chargeable for the musical numbers concerned. The society claims the copyright owner is entitled to protect his property from use by unauthorized persons. The case was taken under advisement by the court.

Ten Are Elected to Academy

Ten new members were elected last week to three branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. George Bancroft, Sylvia Sidney, Spencer Tracy and Loretta Young were elected members of the actors' branch; William V. Mong, associate. Technicians elected were Harry L. Decker, Martin G. Cohn and Barney Wolf; writers, Samuel Marx and Gertrude Purcell.

Courboin To Design Organs

Sir Charles Courboin, internationally known organist and composer, has been appointed head of the department of design for George Kilgen & Son, Inc., pipe organ builders. His work, it has been announced, will be so arranged that he can continue his recitals.

McLaglen To Tour Vaudeville

Victor McLaglen, Fox star, will appear in vaudeville in a sketch he has written. At present he is at work in "Hot Pepper," the new Flagg-Quirt picture with Edmund Lowe and Lupe Velez. He expects to be on tour early in 1933.

DANCERS

O'Connor Family (4)

Buffalo Buffalo

Two boys and an attractive blonde sister, also their remarkably young-appearing brunette mother, who they say taught them to dance, offer a fast series of tap and acrobatic steps. Particularly sensational is the cartwheel and somersault work of the taller of the two young men. They were well received.

Four Flash Devils

Baltimore Hippodrome

This colored foursome offers some speedy stepping that the audience liked and applauded.

Chamberlin & Himes

Buffalo Buffalo

In "Reverse on the Apache," this mixed duo have a lowdown dance routine that won instant and lasting audience approval. The aptitude of the name is beyond question.

NOVELTY

Blanche Sweet

Buffalo Buffalo

The former silent screen star shows her versatility in a revuette, "Sweet and Lovely," in which she sings, emotes and dances. Miss Sweet's speaking and singing voice is sufficiently true and strong to carry into the galleries without the aid of microphones, quite a feat for any woman performer in this huge theater, but especially so for a screen star. With the aid of two men, she does the renunciation scene from "Anna Christie," giving it great dramatic intensity. She also sings and exchanges badinage with Al Rinker, one of Paul Whiteman's ex-Rhythm Boys, and appears in a waltz number with Loc Lorraine that brought salvos of applause. Amazingly youthful in appearance, with a sylphlike figure, judiciously chosen costumes and undiminished vivacity, Miss Sweet impressed this audience as few "personal appearances" have done.

San Francisco Golden Gate

These jugglers certainly have the goods and know how to handle them. Nothing in the juggling line seems too difficult for them and the applause breaks before thay have completed one of them. Another feature is their clever way of introducing a comedy turn occasionally and getting a laugh to break the tension.

Ted Claire

Oakland Fox-Oakland

Ted Claire acts as master of ceremonies for the stage offering "Tahiti" and does a good job of it, too. He gets a great hand for himself when he takes the part of a derelict in a great city, offering as an encore an imitation of Al Jolson.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

WILD OSCAR (New York Loew's 175th), assisted by Egon Dougherty at the organ, presented an interesting and plenty entertaining novelty this week. Oscar's usual announcement slide opens the solo, but to the surprise of the audience a stranger is seated at the organ. They weren't sure of their eyes until Oscar stepped into the spotlight and introduced his pal, Dougherty, who, he announced, would play all the numbers as he, Oscar, circulated through the audience and had different people sing into the mike. Oscar had about fifty feet of wire on the hand mike, and a lot of fun was had when different patrons sang. Some of them were exceptionally good and others were atrocious, but everybody was entertained. Oscar and Dougherty received good applause at the grand finale.

TED MEYN (Jersey City Jersey) again offered an organ novelty that proved entertaining and had the entire audience singing, wholeheartedly. Opening with an oral introduction in which he agreed to gratify the audience's desire for oldtimers, which they had requested, he went directly into "Old Apple Tree," "There Are Smiles," "Wabash Moon" and "Margie." For the closing group Ted offered "Sure of Everything But You," "Up and Down the Hill" and closed with "Put Out the Lights." A lot of laughs and fun was had in the singing of the special lyrics to the next to closing song. Meyn still rates the good applause given him at the finish of his novelties.

WINIFRED RENWORTH (Seattle Fox) recently presented a "Chinese Fantasy" solo that met a very favorable reception. A special Chinese setting was created by the use of a few lanterns and Chinese embroideries, and Miss Renworth wore a Chinese costume. The solo opened with "In a Chinese Temple Garden," followed by a few bars of an original Chinese melody adapted by Miss Renworth. "China Girl" was the next number featured, in fox trot tempo, to be followed by the plaintive "Chinese Lullaby" from "East Is West." The number was blended into the finale which introduced Kreisler's "Tambourine Chinois." Further atmospheric effect was gained by the use of decorative Chinese slides flashed on the grand drapery.

ART THOMPSON (Uhrichsville State) who returned to this theatre Thanksgiving Day, offered for his solo a novelty written for the occasion, entitled "Here I Am Again." Thompson, who was quite popular here on his previous engagement, returned to an audience who knew him and welcomed him back with real applause.

Thompson's numbers were "Rock-a-bye Moon," "Sidewalks of New York," "Here's Hoping" and "Shanty-town." Two special parodies on old numbers took care of the comedy angle and had the entire audience in a laughing mood.

HARRY F. PEARL (Buffalo Kensington) recently offered an outstanding novelty that incorporated surprise and comedy. Pearl was dressed in oriental fashion, with a huge turban on his head. As he played and gazed into a crystal the first three slides explained that the audience were to concentrate on one of six songs listed on screen. As these were played, Pearl won much laughter with his clever comedy, between songs. For a close, he had the audience whistle the first chorus of "Couldn't Say Goodby" and sing the last. The entire solo ran but 8 minutes and gained plenty applause.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Well, here it is, the end of another year, and I can hear a million voices shouting, "Thank Goodness." . . . We've all suffered this past year, some of us more than others, but we must sell ourselves on the idea that 1933 will bring us all back on top. . . . We've got to start out with renewed energy and all try to help get things back to normal (Gosh, I hope you don't think I have taken a "shot" in the arm). . . . Listen, guy, I've had my share of being in the "dumps" too, but honestly, after reading the above, it's kind of given me a different outlook toward the future and a feeling that we'll all make the grade this year. . . .

In the past two years about three hundred organists throughout the country have signed their names on a plaque in Harry Blair's office which has as its title, "The Noon-Day Club." This was all started in fun, and an excuse to get together at luncheon time . . . but now . . . Harry Blair has started out on his own and "The Noon-Day Club" has become an actuality. . . . Blair, who is affectionately known as "Pop," has brought to a head an idea that this same club, started as a gag, could become of vital importance to every organist in the country . . . and believe you me, this service that Harry Blair and his "Noon-Day Club" is going to give to the members of his club, will not only be a life-saver to every organist, but will, without a doubt, help enormously in putting you fellows back as the important attractions in theatres. . . .

Paul Whiteman . . . Guy Lombardo . . . Bing Crosby . . . Connie Boswell . . . Russ Colombo . . . Morton Downey . . . and a number of lesser known lights sure think pretty highly of the new Feist song, "Street of Dreams," which was written by those two fine composers, Victor Young and Sam Lewis. . . . All of them have recorded the number and have sung it many times over the air. . . . The song has a beautiful melody and its lyrics are full of sentiment, just the thing for this time of the year. . . .

Paul Ash, currently playing the Capitol, has an aggregation that is the best he has ever had. . . . They were all hand-picked by Ash and all of them are clever entertainers, besides being darned good musicians. . . . Here is an outfit that should have a big spot on the air, and by the old grapevine, I hear that it will have shortly. . . .

Closing with a sincere wish for a prosperous New Year, I am your humble scribe.

Offers Theatre Course

A new course, "The Art of the Theatre," has been instituted by the University of California Extension Division. It will be offered by Sheldon Cheney, author of "The Art Theatre," "Stage Decoration" and "The Theatre," and editor and founder of the Theatre Arts Monthly.

OVERTURES

CHARLES PAUL (New York Jamaica Valencia) recently presented an overture, compiled of old and new Berlin songs, and entitled "Irving Berlin's Melodies."

Opening with a snappily played rendition of "Alexander's Rag-Time Band," Paul conducted his aggregation in "Remember," "Puttin' on the Ritz," "How Deep Is the Ocean" (on this number Paul vocalizes in a surprisingly fine voice and draws heavy applause). An instrumental trio next played "Say It Isn't So," followed by a violin solo of "Russian Lullaby," at the end of which a special arrangement is used for closing. Paul deserves special mention for his fine conducting, showmanly style of working and pleasing voice.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) opens his program of the week with a medley of "Over There," "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag," "Where Do We Go From Here" and "Hinckey Dinkey Parlez Vous." This is followed by an artillery transition and the appearance of a mixed company of twenty on the stage, singing "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "Roses of Picardy" and "My Buddy," trailing off into "Taps," which is followed by a stage tableaux depicting soldiers marching off a battlefield against a background of flashing and thundering artillery. The second part of Lieb's program features Irene Kessler, radio blues singer with a lively personality. Her songs, "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea" and "You've Got Me Worryin' For You," are eminently suited to her style.

CHARLIE DAVIS (Milwaukee Wisconson) and his Gloomchasers include several comedy novelty bits in connection with their selections. The one offering is good for plenty of laughs and features a lesson in which several members of the band teach one of their number the intricacies in playing the cymbals. The Wisconsin male chorus of 16 voices renders "Bells of St. Mary" and "Anchors Aweigh," accompanied by the band in a highly acceptable manner.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) plays an orchestral arrangement of some of the best known violin solos. Included in this number are Toselli's "Serenade," Drdla's "Souvenir," Kreisler's "Liebesfreud" and Massenet's "Meditation," from "Thais"—this last selection being in the form of a violin solo, played by Forbes himself and bringing considerable applause. This is followed by a fast-stepping number called "Louisiana Hay Ride." Lee Mason sings while the rest of the orchestra cuts a series of typical "Forbesque" capers.

RUSS MORGAN (Detroit Fox) opens with a medley of Southern melodies, including "Swanee River" and "Kentucky Home." The Fox Choral Singers appear in Colonial dress in a setting backed by a mansion and surrounding estate. The first number is the stirring "'Way Down South," followed by a harmonious version of "Going Home." There is a flash of contrast between "Old Virginny" and the appearance of three colored tap dancers following this melancholy number. A male quartet gives a fair rendition of "All God's Chillun." The final choral number is "Dixie." Alluring Irene Kessler, using the organ console for background, sings "Say It Isn't So" and "Three's a Crowd."

TWO EXCEPTIONS TO REPLIES

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 153.—(A) Name the various things that will operate to increase resistance in a water pipe. In an electrical conductor. [Better think that one over a bit.] (B) What determines the necessary size of a water pipe or of an electrical conductor? (C) At what point does overload begin in an electric conductor? Name the various reasons why an electric conductor should never be appreciably overloaded.

Former Projectionist Answers Question 144

Lewis O'Harra, Eagle Rock, California, writes a friendly letter setting forth the fact that while he is no longer a projectionist, he nevertheless still retains interest and finds my department of particular interest. He is now a station operator for the Department of Water and Power, Los Angeles, California. The station is supplied with three-phase power at 35,000 volts, which is stepped down to 4,600 volts by two banks of transformers of 10,000 KVA capacity.

O'Harra submits an answer to Bluebook School question 144, the answer to which appeared in the November 26 issue. He says:

"I wish to take some exception to the answer to section "B" (in November 26 issue of the Motion Picture Herald). The question is 'Suppose we have two high voltage electric generators of equal voltage and capacity. We connect their poles together: positives and negatives to like poles, or the other way around. What will happen?'

"With positive and negative poles of one machine connected to like poles of the other and their voltages equal is the only way two generators can be run together on a parallel system. The only difference between the condition in the question and the usual set up is that there is no load or line to carry a load. In the case of compound wound machines there will have to be an equalizing connection between the two machines to keep the voltages of the two machines equal. If this connection is not provided the two machines will not remain at the same voltage and very quickly, things will happen. This equalizing connection is connected between the commutator brushes and the series winding on each machine. Shunt wound machines will run without this connection. Another thing is that the two machines need not be of the same capacity but their voltages must be the same.

"There may be an interchange of current between the two machines when there is no load on account of the voltages not being perfectly balanced, but if the voltages are perfectly balanced the voltage of one machine will neutralize that of the other and no current will flow. If a load is connected, the current required for this load will be divided between the two machines in proportion to their capacities provided they have the same characteristics.

"The second part of section 'B' was not answered in the November 26 issue; that is, where the positive and negative poles of one machine are connected to the opposite poles of the other machine. This would produce the most perfect short circuit one could imagine. However, if the positive of one machine was connected to the negative of the other machine and the other connection left open, the voltage across the two machines would be equal to the sum of the voltages of the two machines whether they were equal or not.

"In section 'C' the answer is correct as far as the equipment connected to this system is concerned, but in high voltage systems it is very dangerous if not fatal for a person to stand on the ground and touch a bare wire or connection on such a system, no matter how thoroughly such a system may be insulated. There is a charge superimposed on all high voltage systems that workmen have to protect themselves from. I have never heard a satisfactory explanation of this condition. The workmen call it static."

We all thank friend O'Harra. I was not myself aware of the static effect he describes. When I asked the question I had in mind only emphasizing the fact that either side of an electric generator has absolutely no affinity for earth or anything else except the opposite polarity of the same generator.

However, while in theory, omitting the effect described, it might be safe to stand on wet earth and pick up one raw wire of a high tension system, I can assure O'Harra I'm going to let some other chap do it, if any. The insulation might not be so darned perfect and as an electric torch I'm afraid I'd not be a pronounced success! Too fleshy. Make too much smoke.

Another Criticizes, Defines Several Terms

Nicholas J. Tedesco, presumably a projectionist, Hartford, Connecticut, exercises his pen as follows, though I do not know to just what article he refers:

"Replying to the projectionist who apparently has the idea that we burn voltage instead of amperes, the following may help him. Voltage—the electro magnetic force of a circuit (E. M. F.) is that electric pressure which causes a current to flow in a closed circuit. The practical unit of E. M. F. is the volt, which is the electrical pressure which will cause one ampere to flow through one ohm resistance. The E. M. F. of a circuit is the voltage of that circuit.

"An ampere is the practical unit of electric current—volume of flow. It is the current produced in a closed circuit under a pressure of one volt, the resistance of that circuit being one ohm. It is that quantity of current which will deposit .005084 of a grain of copper per second. It is one-tenth of the absolute C. G. S. unit of current strength. Amperes equals pressure in volts divided by resistance in ohms. Volts equals amperes multiplied by ohms. Ohms equals volts divided by amperes."

Really I am not able to remember where any one has claimed that only volts are used in power production, but nevertheless in a way that is the fact. I have used this letter to bring out that point. True all three quantities are interdependent upon each other, but just the same when it comes right down to brass tacks it is pressure that produces power, either in electricity, water or steam. True pressure could not act without the thing we call "current" and measure in amperes. No one yet knows for sure what it is, but without it E. M. F. could not perform work. Without resistance we could not have either incandescent or arc lights, at least by any method yet known.

The fact remains, however, that while all three quantities are interdependent to such an extent that neither could produce results without the other, when we simmer it all down, it is pressure that actually produces results. It is the effort of the current (whatever that is) to dissipate its pressure that makes the old arc burn, or the incandescent film to glow or the motor to produce power, and that is that.

Westinghouse Elects Two

C. E. Stephens, former commercial vice president of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and N. G. Symonds, former commercial vice president in Chicago, were named vice presidents of the company at a board of directors meeting last week. Mr. Symonds will be in charge of sales.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

THE BIGGEST MECHANICAL FACTOR IN TODAY'S MOVIES

EASTMAN Super-sensitive "Pan" has caused such widespread changes and improvements that it easily rates as the biggest mechanical factor in the excellence of today's motion picture. On the foundation supplied by this film, cameramen, directors, actors, and laboratories have been able to build a motion picture art as far ahead of old techniques as movies on the original Eastman "Pan" were ahead of color-blind photography...Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" finds its fullest possible expression with the gray-backed base on which it is now supplied. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

ENTER MR. ROCKEFELLER

ALMOST inadvertently, it seems, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has become one of the largest of investors in the motion picture, what with the hundred thousand shares in RKO held by his Metropolitan Square Corporation on a lease adjustment and the very large Rockefeller holdings in the Chase National Bank, which has in turn quite a bit of Fox, to say nothing of some other odds and ends. This will not do the industry a bit of harm—and now once and forever the motion picture is woven completely into the fabric of American business. It can never again be a little lone world by itself.

A TRENDLESS SEASON

THE astute dramatic critics of the New York press have been up and down Broadway examining into the prospects of the stage for the year and find themselves, and the stage, in a pretty pickle. They are unhappy to relate that there appear to be no trends, only just a bit of this and that, scheduled for now and then, all with a heavy over-mantling of maybe. Now a dramatic season without a trend is just as unorthodox as a motion picture season without a cycle. While it is upsetting to have things different, it might be observed that the cause of entertainment, from the point of view of the consumer, can do without trends and cycles for a long time. Trends and cycles alike mean production that is based on what some one else thought of first. The principle works out rather better in the clothing trade than for stage and screen.

Meanwhile, over in Europe there is a trend, a trend to the cheerful. Germany is having a wave of musical and light comedy pictures, so is France. Denmark and Sweden are making comedies. Among American films the important distribution successes are Buster Keaton's, Harold Lloyd's and farces like "This Is the Night," according to Mr. Albert Deane of Paramount International Corporation.

IT WILL PASS

A SCANNING of the "Headlines of 1932" suffices to remind us that there was solid sincerity in Mark Twain's remark: "I am an old man and I have had many troubles, most of which never happened." A considerable number of burning issues, like "exclusive runs" for example, appear to have solved themselves. Time is not only a healer but a solvent. It has been related of Napoleon that he had six baskets for mail, each devoted to the incoming letters of a week, and always gave his attention to the oldest, a week at a time. "Because," he explained, "it is then always too late to take someone's foolish advice." There are many important matters about which nothing needs to be done. That's our favorite decision.

EVERY little while some writer or speaker, discussing the screen, remarks with the flourish of discovery that the Chinese have said: "A picture is better than 10,000 words," or a thousand words or any other handy figure. The old quotation is pretty well worn, but since it seems destined to stay in the phrase book it is about time to restore its authenticity. The original Chinese sage did not write it that way at all. The editor himself delicately admits excavating this adage, some two decades ago, from the ancient Chinese as reproduced in a volume published about 1850. The correct translation is: "One hundred tellings are not so good as one seeing." Practically all Chinese adages and aphorisms are worded in this reverse and negative manner. They like them that way.

HORSE FEATHERS

JUST for the record: The board of censors at Palo Alto in California has barred "Life Begins". On Leland Stanford's race horse farm at Palo Alto in the '70's, in the process of picturing horses in motion, the evolution of the motion picture achieved its last link before the screen. Now the stork wins.

AFTER BOOZE, WHAT?

THE motion picture industry, more especially in exhibition in the larger centers, has suffered not a little at the hands of racketeering union officials. Now that the end of prohibition seems to be in sight the more competent banditti of the rum running syndicates are looking about for new business opportunities, and, if reports are to be credited, with acute interest in the possibilities among the labor unions. Now is not too soon for both the industry and its unions to be getting alert. The revelations of the last two years indicate with painful clarity what the cost of racketeering control is to both employer and employe.

CONCERNING COWOLOGY

THE esteemed and itinerant Mr. J. C. Jenkins of the Herald staff, whose work is always where the weather is best, has the temerity to write from Texas in disagreement with the editor's observation concerning the influence of wild mustard on the cow's contribution to the gelatine component of film. He says it isn't mustard at all, but instead Nebraska alfalfa and corn. We've seen some film that suggested jimpson weed.

2,000-FOOT REELS ARE DISCUSSED AS BIG ECONOMY TO THE INDUSTRY

Secretary Cowan of Academy Confers with Eastern Leaders on Research Council's Program Affecting 10 Practices

Research Council Proposes Methods to Raise Print Quality, Standardize Format of Scripts, Improve Film Care

The new standard of a 2,000-foot reel, proposed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to supplant the present length of 1,000 feet, was being discussed this week in conferences held in New York between Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Council, and home office executives of distributors, theatres and exchanges and leading equipment manufacturers. A complete program of ten major industry practices, which were outlined by the various subcommittees of the Academy's Research Council last month, also covered standardization of non-halation tint, quality of release prints, film preservatives, development of a silent camera, more efficient use of the 35mm film area, correction of distortion in projection, economies in recording, standardization of screen illumination for studio review rooms, and a standard form for scripts. Summarized herewith are the reports on the 2000-foot reel, format of scripts, print quality, and film preservatives. The other subjects will be treated in next week's issue.

Speaking at the meeting, Darryl Zanuck, chairman of the Council, described the organization and scope of that group. "Specifically, our job is to do our utmost in an effort to get pictures of a better quality on the screen and to get them there with greater efficiency and with a lower net cost," Mr. Zanuck said.

"The original procedure of the Producers-Technicians Committee was limited to act only on technical matters. The Research Council may consider problems of a technical nature which concern the actor, director and writer as well. It is my intention, as I am certain that it is your wish, to apply the same principles of cooperation, investigation and action to the problems of writers, actors and directors that this committee has in the past applied to the technical field."

The following summary represents the reports of the work of various Academy special committees assigned to specific projects and presented at the last meeting of the Research Council, from which sources they will probably reach distributors and producers:

AN EFFECTIVE UNIFORM PRACTICE ON REEL LENGTH

Problem

In cutting, release printing, distribution, shipping, and exchange inspection, the producing companies are using the reel of from 800 to 1,000 feet, which has been the established unit for many years. Most theatres, however, are equipped with 2,000 foot magazines and an increasing proportion are doubling up the reels for projection. The situation is complicated by the preference for longer reels among many projectionists in first run houses, by the number of theatres in which only one projectionist is employed, by the fact that studios are frequently unable to avoid issuing reels of very short length, and by the fact that the exchanges have not been able to enforce penalties against reel doubling.

The cost of handling prints in the theatres and exchanges is substantially increased by the fact that pictures are not distributed and projected on the same length reel. Standard Release Print leader and trailer is supplied with every reel on the assumption that it will be used to secure an accurate change-over from reel to reel. The added costs of maintaining leaders and ends of reels in the exchanges and of cutting, doubling and re-splicing the reels in the theatres are directly chargeable to the lack of an established uniform practice on reel length.

Committee

J. M. Nickolaus, Chairman; S. J. Twining, J. J. Milstein, A. J. Guerin, Sidney Burton.

Objectives

To secure further data from all companies to determine the extent of the practice of reel doubling and the annual cost to the industry. To determine the most efficient length of reel unit, from the viewpoints of production, shipping, and cost. To particularly investigate the feasibility of release in lengths of 1,600 to 1,800 feet, using reels with 4-inch hubs to reduce wear on film ends. To carry on development of improved designs of shipping reels. To study foreign release and disc release in relation to reel length. To propose a comprehensive program to give the industry the advantage on unified action in establishing an effective uniform practice.

Digest of Preliminary Report

The committee has made a preliminary investigation of the costs, difficulties, and detailed changes that would be necessary to establish a longer unit of reel length that could be incorporated into the Standard Release Print specfications as a uniform practice for the industry. Tentative specifications were reported for a 13½-inch reel (with 4-inch hub) to carry a maximum of 1,700 feet. The committee recommended that this be used as a basis to secure further data on costs and savings in the individual companies. The committee also recommended a revision in the specifications of the Academy Standard Release Print make-up with the object of securing a saving to the industry through the elimination of certain footage in the leader which is no longer needed.

Action of Council

The procedure of the committee to date was approved. The committee was authorized to communicate the specifications to the individual companies with the understanding that these are tentative and to serve as a basis for securing further data.

AVERAGE QUALITY OF RELEASE PRINTS

Problem

Laboratories in Hollywood operated by or in close touch with the production studios have established high standards of quality and uniformity of product. In many cases release prints and replacements are made by laboratories located in all parts of the world and under present conditions no company can be sure that these will be as good as Hollywood prints obtained from the same negative. Measuring instruments of the various laboratories are not calibrated to any common standard and specifications for optimum prints are difficult to set and enforce.

Committee

L. E. Clark, Chairman; laboratory and sound department executives and commercial laboratory technical executives as committee of the whole.

Objectives

To formulate and give recognition to those desirable standards as to which there is general agreement. To bring more forcibly to the attention of production executives generally the desirability of insuring that the theatre release is of as good quality as the answer print. To undertake a program along the following lines: Standardization of review room projection equipment. Establishment of international standard reference sensitometer. Establishment of standard means for calibrating densitometers. Further investigation of the proposal to incorporate a density spot or simplified sensitometric strip in negative leader of each reel as means of specifying print requirements.

Digest of Preliminary Report

After study of the history of the problem to date and consideration of the points brought together in a previous report by W. C. Harcus, the committee offered the following recommendations:

a. That no attempt be made to set product standards, but that all efforts be directed entirely toward setting of standards for equipment.

b. That the densitometer and sensitometer ap-

PUBLIX NOW 65% DECENTRALIZED; CIRCUIT RETURNS 50 TO COMERFORD

Former Circuit Owner Gets Interest in Houses in 28 Pennsylvania and 2 New York Cities; Taking Over Management

New Policy Successful, with Definite Improvement Indicated in Some Cases, Dembow; Warners Dispose of 7

Paramount's nationwide circuit of motion picture theatres, variously reported to have included from 1,000 to 1,200 properties, has been decentralized 65 to 70 per cent. Consummation last weekend of a deal whereby the corporation returns approximately 50 houses in the coal mining sector of Pennsylvania to M. E. Comerford is the latest development in the movement which got underway late in October when John Hertz, chairman of the finance committee, and representing the bankers, declared for local autonomy in the interest of greater economy and efficiency.

Negotiations between Paramount and the Comerford interests were drawn out over many weeks. The deal gives Mr. Comerford an interest in the group of theatres in Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and other cities in Pennsylvania, formerly owned by him and sold to Paramount in August, 1930, for a sum reported to have been $18,000,000, of which about $6,000,000 was supposed to have been actually paid.

In addition to re-acquiring the interest in the properties in association with Publix, the Comerford group will take over active management of the circuit.

George Walsh, who has been in charge of the circuit since it was acquired by Paramount, moves to the company's headquarters in New York, where he will become assistant to Sam Dembow, Jr., who is in charge of the theatre department. Frank Walker again will play an important part in the circuit's operation with Mr. Comerford. Theatres included in the deal are in 28 Pennsylvania and two New York cities, as follows:

NEW YORK

Owego—Tioga.
Waverly—Capitol.

Decentralization of the Paramount properties has proceeded at a rapid pace. The more important deals, besides Mr. Comerford's, included disposition of blocks of theatres in the south to E. V. Richards, embracing the old Saenger circuit. Mr. Richards assumed active management January 1. Nathan Goldstein took back the former Goldstein Brothers houses in New England. R. J. O'Donnell and William Jenkins figured in a deal including 23 Publix properties in Texas. Ed Dubinsky's houses were returned and so were groups to E. J. Sparks, Wilby-Kincey and others.

Mr. Dembow, under whose direction the movement is proceeding, said in an interview that the decentralization policy had been entirely successful thus far, with distinct improvement indicated in some cases, although most of the decentralized houses have been under local operation for only a comparatively short time. Mr. Dembow is believed to have reflected the sentiments of the management when he said that theatre managment was a purely local affair and should always be conducted on that basis.

The ultimate success of the theatre decentralization policy rests with the personal ability of owners and managers in the field who are now being restored to active partnership, according to Mr. Dembow. Practically all the deals thus far have been on the basis of operating partnerships. The only outright sale definitely known was the Sparks group in Florida. Generally, Paramount disposed of a part interest, turned over complete management to the second party and will participate in profits.

John Hertz recently gave credit for the decentralization plan to Mr. Dembow and to Leo Spitz, an executive of the corporation.

Mr. Dembow traced the growth of Publix through the pre-depression years, when the company built the largest theatre circuit in the country, during a time when large scale production and operation were the order of the day. "During 1928 and until the latter part of 1930, when the situation definitely changed," he said, "we were taking over theatre after theatre and transferring its management to our home office in New York. With business as good as it was at the first period of that organization of a nationwide group of theatres, the process was justified and immediately resulted in certain savings. But when we reached the fall of 1930, it was obvious that the strain of increasingly poor business conditions was uncovering much that was wrong with the system.

"In the first place we learned, and learned quickly, that the local owners and operators, from whom we had taken control of situations, were invariably in a better position to obtain advantageous deals with their local unions, their landlords, civic authorities."

While decentralization has been practiced principally by Paramount, it was announced last week by Warner Brothers that seven of their theatres in Indiana have been disposed of to A. W. Sobler and Alexander Manta. Houses included in this deal are the Hoosier and Capitol, at Whiting; Indiana and American, Indiana Harbor; Bucklen and Warner at Elkhart, and the Jefferson, Goshen.

PROMINENT WOMEN SELECT ROXY FILMS

Howard S. Cullman, now directing the original Roxy theatre, has organized an "advisory committee on film selection," comprising a group of prominent New Yorkers, which will pass on the film selections for the theatre at weekly meetings with Mr. Cullman in advance of showings. Included in the group are Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Kenneth O'Brien and Mrs. Max Rossbach. The committee, it is indicated, will have a definite voice in selection. Its formation is described as "an effort to choose films not alone on the basis of 'trade' or motion picture ideas, but on the basis of the best standards and real desires of the community, as interpreted by some of its outstanding members."

Mentor Pictures To Import Films

A new company, Mentor Pictures, Inc., was recently incorporated as a $500,000 closed corporation for the purpose of importing scientific, educational, novelty and feature motion pictures from Europe. Temporary offices are at 220 West 42 street, New York.

Dr. N. I. Stone, New York, is treasurer of the corporation. Joseph L. Young is secretary, and W. E. MacKee is vice-president. All have been active previously in the industry. Hans von Fraunhofer, of Fraunhofer and Company, Berlin, is European representative of Mentor, with offices in Berlin, Hamburg, Budapest and Vienna. He is also general manager of Photochrome Company, Inc., which controls the Wolfe-Hiede process of natural color production in both 35 and 16 millimeter.

The first releases of Mentor Pictures in the educational and scientific fields will be available March 15. Sound tracks for the American market will be recorded in New York. Silent versions will be edited by Thomas Hogan, formerly with Pathe Audio Review, who also will be in charge of all recording.

Vitaphone Plant to Close

The Vitaphone studio, Warner short subject plant in Brooklyn, will close on January 14 for a period of approximately six weeks, reopening about March 1. By the closing date, the studio will have virtually completed its current production schedule.

RKO ROXY OPENS AND CLOSES, AS MUSIC HALL GOES TO FILM POLICY

Institution of Motion Picture Reflects Impressively Restrained Modernism, Good Taste and Theatrical Housekeeping

First Program Is Standard Product of Capable Showmanship of Samuel Rothafel—Hays' Speech Rings with Laudations

BULLETIN

The new Radio City Music Hall is going over to pictures, with presentations, at popular prices, and the RKO Roxy theatre was scheduled Thursday to go dark pending determination of policy. Less than two weeks after the two openings, the following notice, signed by William Stern, general stage manager, was posted late Wednesday night upon the call board of the RKO Roxy:

"Due to unforeseen emergencies it will be necessary to close this theatre temporarily, effective January 11. This is no reflection on anyone's work, but rather a necessity which we regret to state must be put into effect."

by TERRY RAMSAYE

The RKO Roxy Theatre in Radio City, the motion picture component of the Rockefeller Center amusement enterprises, is now open, successfully open, and there is reasonable assurance that there is no revolution in the art of exhibition yet in sight.

The opening program was a standard product of the capable showmanship of Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel, long familiar to the observers of his two decades of successful presentation.

The bill included an overture, a newsreel section, a cartoon comedy and a drama, all RKO product. There were five stage show numbers of varying merit.

The picture house opening coming on Thursday night of last week, only forty-eight hours after the opening of the Radio City Music Hall by the same showman, two squares up Sixth avenue, detailed in these pages in the last issue, makes a comparison inevitable, even if the projects are not especially mutually relevant. To one spectator at least it appeared that the picture theatre and its show seemed considerably more closely attuned to a reasonable conception of the world and its people.

A Theatre of Good Taste

A theatre of impressively restrained modernism and good taste, reflecting and representing the sum total of all the technological resources of the period, organized and managed after the manner of theatrical housekeeping perfection which is one of the outstanding Rothafel contributions, presented an entertainment that pleased its audience of 3,700. That is a success.

The opening evening was another most gala event, with the cast of "Who's Who and What's What" practically identical with the parade of fame and glory at the Music Hall opening, including the two hundred police, the traffic jams, the newsreel cameras and the general excitement. Mr. Rothafel, in subdued and modest voice, introduced Mr. M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO and the National Broadcasting Company, and he in turn presented Mr. Will H. Hays. Mr. Hays made a ringing speech of laudations, for the motion picture, for the theatre, for America and for Mr. Rockefeller. After which, at the invitation of Mr. Hays, every one stood up for Mr. Rockefeller and then the show started.

> said:
> I congratulate the motion picture art, for which this shall be a distinguished show window, and I am sure that I voice universal public appreciation.
> But this is not the dedication of a theatre—it is a reaffirmation of faith in America's indestructible destiny and a declaration that we still carry on in the tradition of our forefathers.
> Tonight we render tribute to this embodiment of American indomitableness and fearlessness, which rises, like a Pharos, out of the blinding fogs of irresolution and bewilderment to proclaim that leadership has not failed us; that the mighty fortunes of America have not deserted their constructive tasks; that the vision of great captains is not blurred by depression, and that our fundamental structure and undepleted opportunities encourage investment of grander scale and vaster scope than the creations which line our past.

The "Dedication Overture" by Mr. Maurice Baron of the Radio City Theatres staff purported to depict the history of Manhattan Island from the landing of the Dutch to the building of Radio City. It was reinforced with a stage tableau, charmingly lighted and devoted especially to the time the Indians sold the island for twenty-four dollars' worth of beads. It seemed fitting that this should be commemorated on the spot where Roxy had sold Mr. Rockefeller so much.

To the members of the motion picture community of Manhattan Island there was, or should have been, a thrill of recognition in a great shadow play number, wherein a slight symbolic dancer cast a vast shadow engaged in the enactment of movements synchronized with musically assorted sounds related to the Machine Age. It was the ultimate, first, and mayhap final, delivery of the Titan that Hy Daab advertised for so long. He was on the way so long he got to be 40 feet tall.

The newsreel was made up of assembled cuts in the Roxy manner. It was unexcitedly just newsreel without much news, but plenty of reel. News being what it is, nothing could be done about it.

Here and there one gets touches in the Roxy shows that reflect the fact that he has been abroad a bit of late. Some of them incline one to the wish that he had stayed home. One of the "Continental" touches of the bill is Mr. Emil Boreo, said to be an "internationally noted music hall artist." Mr. Boreo did tricks with his hat and chanted in speakeasy French. He delayed the show quite a while. The Roxy Ballet Corps did itself proud with a sparkling performance and the RKO Roxy Roxyettes and chorus presented a number that was a marvel of beauty and color and a piece of the old Roxy glory. The cartoon comedy, "Opening Nights," was funny if you felt that way. In view of the fact that it did not present the best that the screen can do in animated cartoonery it did not precisely add to the magnificence of the occasion. Thereupon appeared a vaudeville act, consisting of Dave Apollon, a Russian, and his "Mexican Apollonians," being a string band. Mr. Apollon was sure he was funny. He slew and dragged in a joke about what Manhattan calls "fairies" and he introduced a very spacious young woman who sang "Piccolo Pete" and another number, just as she used to at a night club in Paterson, New Jersey, and exited the same way, laughing and rubbing her hypogastrium. Those two touches are new to the Roxy technique. He does not need them.

Feature Up to the Occasion

The feature drama, "The Animal Kingdom," produced by RKO and presenting Ann Harding, Leslie Howard and Myrna Loy, was competently up to the occasion, and despite the assorted views of the critics massed for the opening, was good motion picture. It has been sufficiently reviewed in previous issues of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The architectural charms of the theatre kept the first nighters engaged for more than an hour before the opening of the program. Last week's issue of the HERALD presented pictures, and complete description and discussion for showmen will be presented by Mr. George Schutz in our "Better Theatres" section dated January 14.

The receipts for the RKO Music Hall, keyed by price to $20,000 a day on capacity business, and with a forecast of a gross of $130,000 for its first week, had at the end of its seventh day a total of $106,400, according to estimates quoted by Motion Picture Daily. The RKO Roxy, the picture house, has been doing relatively better with a daily gross in the vicinity of $9,000 and the prospect that it would conclude its first week with somewhere between $54,000 and $60,000, according to The Daily.

MGM To Offer Contract Feb. 15, Fox February 1

MGM announced Wednesday that it will "offer to exhibitors the optional standard license contract and has agreed to lend its efforts to promulgating in the industry the National Board of Appeals and Conciliation to hear industry disputes."

"The optional contracts," it was said, "are now being printed and will be offered to exhibitors as soon as they are ready, probably about February 15."

MGM thereby joins Fox and Educational as officially accepting the Kent proposals. As indicated last week, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, other companies will individually accept the agreement in time for application by February 15.

Fox officially announced adoption of the optional contract effective February 1 and acceptance of the proposal of an appeals board.

Jack Pickford Dies in Paris

Jack Pickford, brother of Mary Pickford and himself a wellknown motion picture actor, died on Tuesday in the American Hospital in Paris following a nervous breakdown.

Beginning his screen career with Biograph in 1909, while he was still a boy, he later headed the Jack Pickford Company and later was under contract to Goldwyn, United Artists, First National and Universal. Among his best known starring pictures were "Brown of Harvard," "Gang War," and "Exit Smiling."

Barnstyn, Rogers In New Company

Budd Rogers, former sales executive with Educational-World Wide, has joined the British and Continental Trading Corporation where, with J. C. Barnstyn, he is organizing a new company to distribute both foreign films here and American product on the Continent. The pictures made by Boston Films, of Berlin, will be distributed in this country. Twelve features are expected to be available for distribution during 1933, in all key cities. A deal has been made with World Wide, Mr. Rogers said, for the dubbing of American pictures in foreign languages.

Worthington Butts Dies

Worthington Butts, former president of Butts Litho Company, died suddenly during the week in New York. His body was shipped to Cleveland for interment on Thursday. Shortly before his death Mr. Butts had been planning a return to the lithograph field. He was one of the first lithographers in motion pictures.

LAEMMLE REPLIES TO HERALD EDITOR

Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, continuing a discussion of the influence of the saloon on motion picture business and referring to the editorial on "Saloon Competition" in the Herald, issue of December 24, has written to the editor as follows:

Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

You say you recall no wave of prosperity which hit the box office with the enactment of the Eighteenth amendment. But there was one, just the same. The closing of saloons marked a decided jump in national attendance at picture theatres. Some of this, of course, went back to the speakeasies, but not a very great part of it.

You say also that when I started to climb in this business there were saloons in Chicago. You are correct. But along came local option (long before the national prohibition law) and many saloons were closed. I immediately suggested to owners that they convert their premises into picture houses and many of them followed my suggestion with the result that I secured new customers for my film renting concern. Thus the picture business got a direct benefit from the closing of saloons. It got another when saloons throughout the country were closed.

I hope you understand my point. It is not legalizing of beer and booze which makes me fear a resultant harm to the picture business, but rather the return of the open saloon, whether called a saloon, a drug store or some other kind of a store. And don't fool yourself about the competition of beer and pretzels. It's mighty strong competition, my boy!

Sincerely yours,
CARL LAEMMLE

Otterson Lectures Before Group on Sound Reproduction

The results of the most recent research in the development of sound recording and reproduction in motion pictures, and the possibilities of future development form the subject of a lecture to be delivered by John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., in the Fisk Building, New York, on Thursday. The lecture is the ninth of a course on "A New Conception of the Voice and the New Ways of Reproducing It," sponsored by the New School for Social Research.

Among the mechanisms which Mr. Otterson was to discuss is the new "hill and dale" process of disk recording.

Selznick Announces Signing Of One-Year Contract

David O. Selznick, on the Coast, has announced that he has signed a new one-year contract as executive producer in charge of RKO Radio production at the Coast studio.

Florida Theatre Provides Annual Christmas Party

More than 6,800 poor and needy children of Jacksonville, Fla., on Christmas Day were entertained, greeted Santa Claus and were presented with toys and candy at the annual Christmas Day party of the Happy Hearts Club, at the Florida theatre, largest house in the circuit of E. J. Sparks. The Florida is managed by Guy Kenimer, who handled all arrangements for the Christmas Tree party. The Junior Chamber of Commerce of the city and the Jacksonville Journal assist in the work.

The children arrive at the theatre by trolley, free through the courtesy of the traction company, by buses furnished by the bus lines and by special school buses. Club workers, who have assisted since the inauguration of the idea in 1926, aided in the distribution of the presents.

Warners Seeking Reaction to Talent

In picking future star talent, Warner Bros. is asking exhibitors to co-operate by getting the reactions of the picture-going public to the players whom Warners are grooming for starring roles. The company has selected 11 featured players whom they will eventually star. These are Ruby Keeler, Glenda Farrell, Harold Huber, Aline MacMahon, Lyle Talbot, Preston S. Foster, Claire Dodd, Frank McHugh, Dick Powell, Allen Jenkins and Patricia Ellis.

Bondholder Sues, Claiming Chase Violated Trust

Chase National Bank, as trustee for the 20-year sinking fund bond issue of Paramount, is alleged to have violated its trust in failing to protect bondholders, according to a suit filed last week in federal court in New York, in which L. F. Harris, executor of the estate of Ida C. Harris, asked that a receiver in equity be substituted for Chase. Harris said that $5,000 of the bonds are owned by the interests which he represents.

Roxy Operated On After Radio City Theatres' Debut

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, director general of the RKO Radio City theatres, the RKO Roxy and the Music Hall, was operated on last Saturday at Post Graduate Hospital, New York. Doctors described the operation as minor, and associates declared he would leave the hospital this week. He will convalesce at his home in the city.

Wanger Joins MGM; Will Produce Eight Films Yearly

Walter Wanger, who resigned as vice-president of Columbia Pictures recently, will join MGM at the end of this month. Mr. Wanger has concluded a contract whereby he will produce eight pictures a year. The definite announcement of the MGM contract supplants reports that he would join RKO Radio.

KIDS KIDDING IT, TOO! Hollywood, we mean. Taking example from their elders. These youngsters are of Educational's Baby Burlesk group, shown ready for a scene in "Kid'in' Hollywood," with Arthur James Maskery as a director.

ASSIGNED NEW ROLE. (Left) Tala Birell, whom Universal brought from Vienna, where she was a prominent stage player. Her first important film part was in "Nagana," and now Universal has cast her in another, "Black Pearls."

PHOTOGRAPHY IN THE NEW MANNER. Presumably following the methods of the system brought out in Paris (by which, if you want to photograph a prize fight, you "shoot" the gaping crowd), the camerartist thus recorded some stunt flying for First National's latest Richard Barthelmess picture, "Central Airport," taking the pictures of Director William Wellman, Sally Eilers and the star.

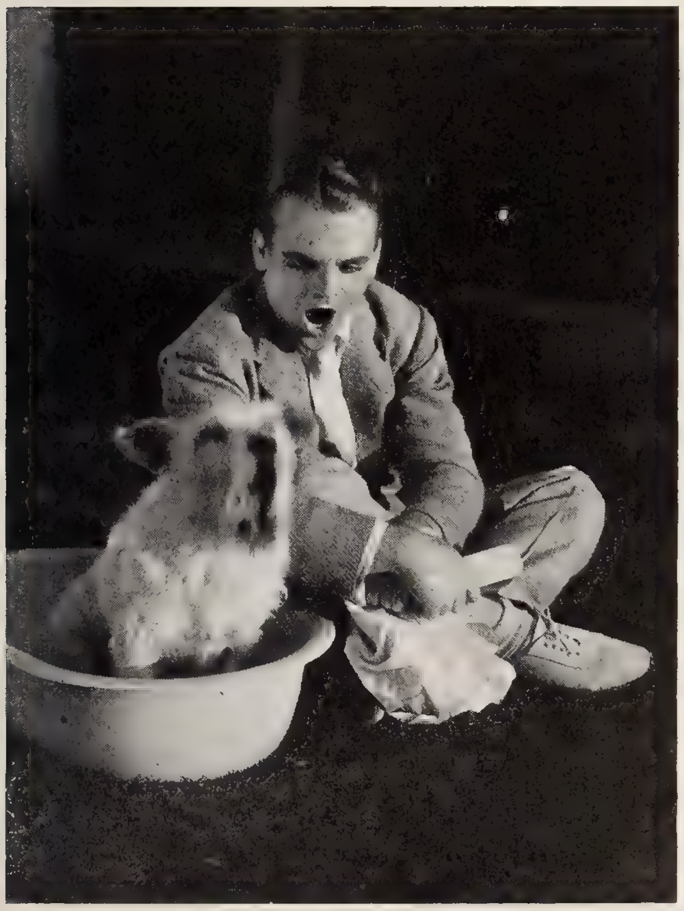
AT RKO ROXY OPENING. Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution of RKO Radio Pictures, arriving with Mrs. Depinet.

LEGAL MOTHER. Due process of law has given Lupe Velez the guardianship of Joan, her sister's youngest child, with whom the Fox player is here proudly pictured. Joan, who now of course is an American citizen, comes from Mexico.

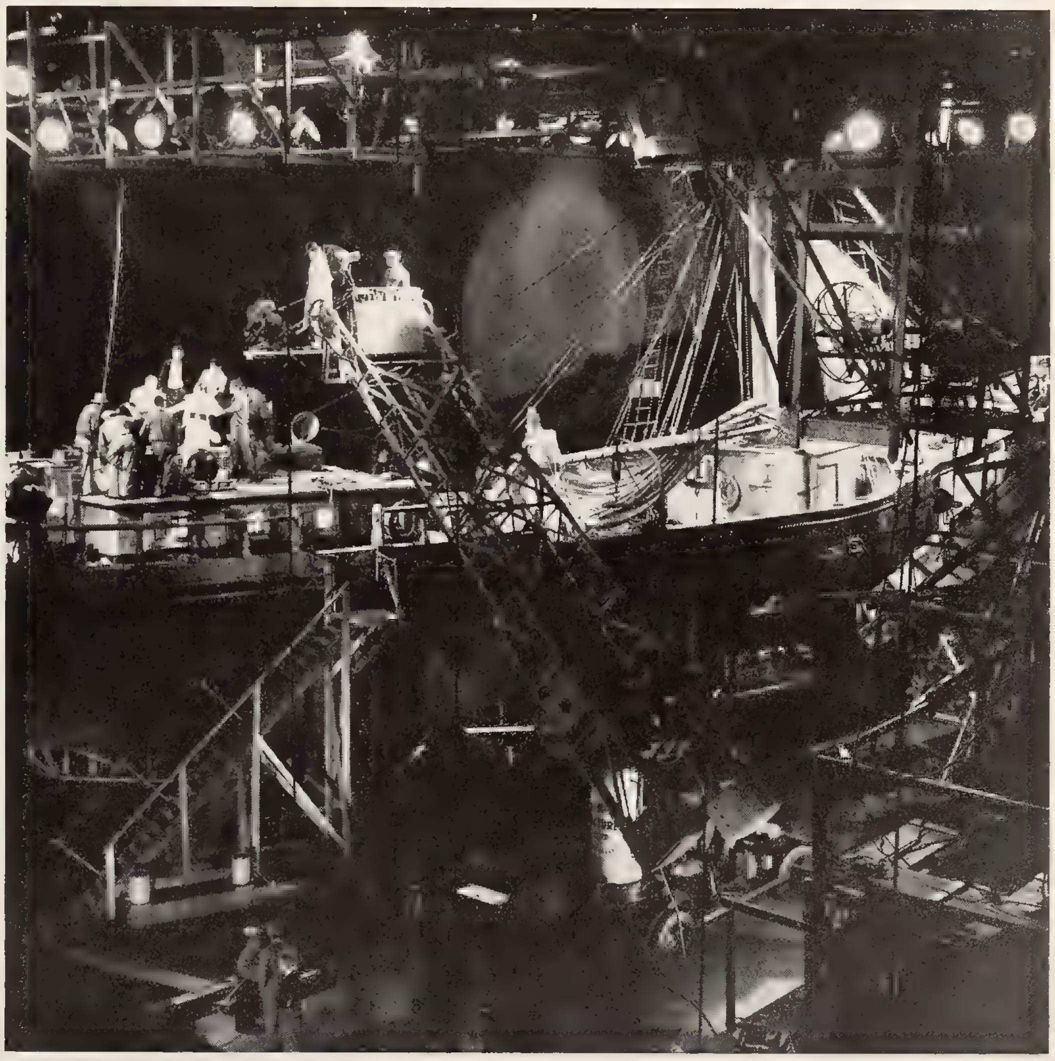
AT RKO ROXY OPENING. David Sarnoff, president of Radio City's dominant entity, the Radio Corporation of America, shown with Mrs. Sarnoff.

STILL COUNTING BIRTHDAYS. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., marks the arrival of his 25th year with the help of a cake sent by his wife, Joan Crawford, and of those making his new Warner picture, "Sucker." Director Mayo at his right.

HIS LATEST CHARACTER. (Right) There are no feline restrictions on the lives of Jean Hersholt, who has already far outnumbered the proverbial nine. Here he is in his characterization for MGM's Wallace Beery film, "Flesh."



EMULATION. But whether James Cagney is mimicking his Sealyham pup, or vice versa, is the question. Or maybe both are doing a Joe E. Brown, with, of course, little success. Cagney's next Warner Brothers picture is "Hard to Handle."



COLOSSI. The technology of modern motion picture production imposes few limitations in dimensions, linear or otherwise, and as a result more and more is being done right on the lot, instead of on location. Here is an example, in the set constructed for Universal's "Destination Unknown," incorporating a ship in ocean-going scale and requiring production equipment to match.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Metro's Culver City studio has a special and highly diversified production cabinet composed of Sam Wood, comedy specialist; Howard Hawks, the realist; Sidney Franklin, the cosmopolitan; Edgar Selwyn, a masterly tear-jerker; Clarence Brown, very tactful with veterans like Marie Dressler, and Tod Browning, a connoisseur of the vicious. These men are "shock absorbers" for Irving Thalberg, production generalissimo. While the rest of the studio is munching in the noisy commissary, the cabinet sits down to luncheon with Mr. Thalberg in the "Executive Bungalow," the White House of Culver City; a squatty hut with a Cecil B. DeMille dining room. It is in this room where the plans are laid for those famous Metro profits. Hunt Stromberg, who is described by the company as a "box office producer par excellence," is the only member of the council who, by contract, can work without Mr. Thalberg's approval. Others are Bernie Hyman and Bernie Fineman; Irish Eddie Mannix, Harry Rapf and Larry Weingarten, brother-in-law of Boss Thalberg.

Imagine Ophelia getting popped in the eye or being on the receiving end of a deft kick as she delivered her exit lines? Mr. James Cagney, the hard-hitting hero of Warners' heroines, arrived in New York the other morning after stopping off at Kansas City just long enough to inform a few dozen autograph seekers assembled in Union Station that he would like to transfer his popping activities from the ordinary type of picture to something like Mr. Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

In summing up motion picture events of the year just passed, Paramount says: "History may characterize 1932 as the year when Hollywood learned about cooperation and efficiency." It took 30 years.

Sally Eilers and Ralph Bellamy had just completed a wedding scene on the Movietone lot when an extra, who had been the "minister" marrying the two, soberly confided that he was an ordained preacher and that the ceremony with witnesses, ring, et al, was legal. Ralph sputtered in confusion and Miss Eilers thought of friend husband, Hoot Gibson. The "clergyman" insisted that he was telling the truth and offered to prove his claim. The pair learned later that they were victims of one of director Hamilton MacFadden's practical jokes. Some fun.

Radio Pictures, for one, hopes to benefit by the return of beer. Taking issue with Carl Lammle, Universal president, who said recently that the sale of beer in saloons would be disastrous to the motion picture industry, B. B. Kahane, head of Radio, believes that not only will the return of beer aid business in general, but its legalization would also have a stimulating effect on the motion picture industry. We doubt if 3.2 per cent will stimulate anything.

We don't feel so badly now that we know that Demosthenes, the world's greatest orator, stuttered, and that Caesar and Napoleon, two great soldiers, had epileptic fits. Milton, one of the world's greatest poets, was blind, while Byron had a club foot and Shelley was probably insane. Steinmetz, one of the world's greatest scientists, was dwarfed and deformed, and Beethoven, a musician of the finest, was deaf.

KATZ AWAY, MICKEY WON'T PLAY

Sam Katz, on Wednesday, was reported about to take over the operation of the old Seventh avenue Roxy. Mr. Katz was out, or away, or something, but his office declared there "was nothing to it as yet."

Howard S. Cullman, receiver for the theatre, and unfamiliar with film personalities, dismissed the reported deal with this:

"I have never met Sam Katz—or even Louie Mouse."

Mickey Mouse was busy in Walt Disney's inkpot and could not be reached for a statement.

Jack Mulhall is currently playing his 33d consecutive week in vaudeville. This is an unusually long engagement for a picture star, although it is not a record. Mr. Mulhall has no illusions about it, explaining his success on the stage thusly: "The thing that brings people to the theatre to see a movie actor is the same thing that brings them to see a two-headed calf—curiosity."

Roberta Lee Estes is one of the youngest to appear on the Saenger theatre stage at New Orleans, or anywhere else. This few weeks old miss, daughter of Joe Estes, Saenger press agent, and Ballet Mistress Helen Strakova, was the star of a special ceremony, when, after a night's show last week, she was baptized on the stage. House Manager Robert Blair and his wife, the charming Lee, after whom the baby is named, were the godparents. Mr. Estes celebrated the occasion by launching a series of teaser ads in newspapers on the admission change at the Saenger. Copy featured the numerals "11-25-6-40," One hunch-hunting negro played the numbers in a lottery and won $73.

Enthusiastic Al Zimbalist, press agent for Warner theatres in northern New Jersey, has started a boosting movement. "The first thing to remember in this boosting campaign," said Zimbalist, "is that we never make a bad picture. . . . It's good or Warner Brothers would never become associated with it!"

Charles E. Lewis, editor of our Managers' Round Table Club, was recuperating nicely from the flu until he learned that he had been appointed a colonel on the military staff of Governor Ruby Laffoon in Kentucky, where making moonshine and colonels are the favorite pastimes. After receiving the commission, with quite some surprise, Mr. Lewis was probably struck with the idea that generals should never die in bed. He immediately jumped to his feet with a click o' the heels and a smart salute to the pretty nurse and proceeded to get ready to come back to work. But "Chick" is not used to army life—he suffered a relapse and had to go back to bed.

The authorities of Baratonga, one of the Cook Islands in the South Pacific, have barred from further showing "Robinson Crusoe," in which the sprightly Douglas Fairbanks leaps from tree to tree. It was too exciting for the natives. Many of them tried to do some of Mr. Fairbanks' primitive stunts and got into trouble. Wait till they see Paramount's "Panther Woman."

Paramount's recent deal with Theodore (Facts of Life) Dreiser for rights to another story brings to mind Mr. Dreiser's holy zeal in upbraiding Paramount for "ruining" his "American Tragedy"; his subsequent lofty attacks on the art through articles which he sold to 5 and 10 cent store magazines, and his general pointing of the finger of scorn in the direction of southern California. Now it seems that Mr. Dreiser was only fooling. He has permitted another of his brain children to run the risk of being mangled by the same people—for a price. But authors are not supposed to be commercial. Or, quoting John G. Moffit, Kansas City critic, has the exploitation department something to do with the situation?

David Wark Griffith, a director of long standing in the cinema, has gone commercial. The radio microphone has lured him away from the director's megaphone with offers of pots of gold. Beginning January 4, Mr. Griffith will broadcast twice weekly for Lehn and Fink's "Honey and Almond" cream. He will be the guiding spirit in an ether presentation of dramatic episodes of his life as a motion picture producer. These will be related while the station announcer intermittently explains how best to remove all wrinkles and smooth the face; close large pores and improve the race.

While driving through Bronxville, a large Lincoln car flew out of the hands of Lewis H. Innerarity, a motion picture attorney, and came to rest on all four wheels in the Bronx river at Road Bridge. Mr. Innerarity was but slightly injured and was expected to leave the hospital Wednesday.

Merian C. Cooper, famed adventurer and motion picture producer, sent out a director, some cameramen and helpers in a whaling boat to shoot preliminary sequences for a new picture. The entire boatload came back to Los Angeles without any film. After several hours out they were blown to sea too far to be comfortable. Next they were raided by a coastguard cutter which thought them rum-runners. They searched for hours for a whale, and finally, when they did find one, an overgrown aquatic mamal if there ever was one, it playfully waved its tail once, struck the side of the boat and disabled it to such an extent that they had to turn on the pumps and sail for shore in a hurry.

Nothing Startling in Holidays' Outgiving, Says Meehan, but Good Average Entertainment

by LEO MEEHAN

James Cagney will soon be back in the marquee lights. His first picture since he patched up his salary rumpus with Warners is "Hard to Handle," but it won't be. It is a rapid fire comedy drama, with the accent on the comedy, in which Cagney plays the role of a press agent and promoter. The picture packs plenty of wallop and is full of laughs. Ruth Donnelly, whom you may remember as the girl who played Lee Tracy's secretary in "Blessed Event," proves a sensation as a comedienne. She comes pretty near stealing the show, and looks like a coming comedy bet after this one.

Warners also previewed another during the week, "Ladies They Talk About." It is an itimate revelation of the life of women in prison, and is based upon a story by Dorothy Mackaye, the little actress who served time not so long ago in California's famous San Quentin prison. It features Barbara Stanwyck and Preston Foster. A grim setting, of course, and it's restricted as to locale. The comedy sometimes gets pretty rough.

"Wax Museum" a "Shocker"

Just to show that they are busy, Warners also finished up "Wax Museum" and sent it on its way, too. It belongs in the shocker class, for those who favor goose pimple entertainment. Much of the action is laid in a wax figure museum, providing fine opportunities for creepy stuff. Color photography enhances the values as it did in the case of "Doctor X." It made quite an impression at the preview.

Ralph Ince has pounded out a punchy yarn for RKO Radio called "Lucky Devils." It is all about the life and work of the studio stunt men, the fellows who gamble their lives to provide your audiences with thrills. There's good inside film stuff, with plenty of thrills and melodrama included. Bill Boyd plays the lead.

"Second Hand Wife" falls in the class of family entertainment. It is a faithful screen adaptation of a Kathleen Norris story, and, as you probably know, Mrs. Norris is one of the most popular authors of this generation. Hamilton MacFadden adapted and directed it for Fox, and it features Sally Eilers and Ralph Bellamy. The story should be particularly interesting to women. The second hand wife is the office secretary who is married to her boss when love grows cold at home and his wife divorces him. There's lots of dialogue, and a minimum of action, but the story is interesting, with good suspense, wholesome treatment.

Armstrong in Fine Role

Charles R. Rogers has finished his third picture for Paramount, "The Billion Dollar Scandal." We doubt if there is that much money in the world, but it is based upon the famous oil scandals of the Harding administration days, not a new subject by any means. Nevertheless, some very real characters and a vivid treatment of the subject make it an entertaining film. Robert Armstrong does probably the best role he ever has played on the screen.

Paramount has a gay, colorful picture in "Tonight Is Ours," one of those mythical kingdom stories, beautifully done with a swell cast headed by Claudette Colbert, Fredric March, Alison Skipworth. The romance is delightful, and it is the romantic theme that has been stressed. Costumes, court balls and all that sort of thing make a grand appeal to the eye. It's one of the kind that makes you settle back in the seat and enjoy it all, because you don't have to believe there is anything really true about the story.

Nothing sensational has developed in any of the pictures previewed during the holiday season, but on the whole they stack up as good average entertainment.

Stories to Set Majestic Costs

Phil Goldstone, treasurer of Majestic Pictures and producer of its features, gained the approval of the company board of directors at a meeting in New York last week, for a plan of production which eliminates the budgeting of series of pictures. It is the contention of Mr. Goldstone that a series of features should not be budgeted; that the requirements of each individual story should be the sole governing factor in establishing its cost of production.

Later discussing the idea, the producer pointed out as a common fallacy the setting of a definite production cost for each of a series. He believes that many stories might result in excellent pictures at a cost of $75,000 while others might require the expenditure of many times that amount.

Herman Gluckman, president of Majestic Pictures, has inaugurated regular weekly conferences of the executive committee. The committee includes Mr. Gluckman, William Shapiro of Boston, Tony Luchesse, Philadelphia; Joseph Simmonds, Tower Pictures, all franchise holders.

paratus in use in the New York release print laboratories be investigated.

c. That a subcommittee be appointed to determine the present value of screen illumination in the review rooms and projection theatres in the studios and Hollywood laboratories.

Action of Council

The recommendations of the committee were approved and the committee authorized to continue with the investigations outlined.

STANDARDIZATION OF FORMAT OF SCRIPTS

Problem

Since the introduction of sound, there has been no generally recognized format of scripts. As a result, the placement, order, numbering and display of the various parts—dialogue, action, set descriptions, camera instructions, etc., vary widely among the studios and are constantly subject to change. This unnecessarily complicates the work of those who handle the scripts during production.

(Report by Carey Wilson, Writers Branch.)

Proposed

To conduct such surveys as may be necessary to establish the basis for the various present practices. To correlate this information and secure general agreement on a recommended form of script that will be most legible, graphic, and convenient in practical use by actors, directors, writers, executives and the various production departments.

INVESTIGATION OF FILM PRESERVATIVES

Problem

A number of compounds are on the market which manufacturers claim will lengthen the life of release prints, increase film pliability, protect the surface from oil and scratches, reduce buckling and warping, and make the film self-lubricating. Studios and laboratories have tried these preparations from time to time and found both advantages and disadvantages.

Committee

C. Roy Hunter, Chairman; Fred Gage, A. J. Guerin.

Objectives

To test the claims for the principal preparations under practical conditions of use with high intensity projection lamps, etc., and make recommendations for the information of the studios on the basis of efficiency in relation to cost.

Digest of Committee Report

Since the last meeting of the council, the committee has conducted a survey of compounds offered to the studios, and has thoroughly investigated and tested more than 20 "coating," "fuming" and "formalin glycerine hardening" methods. Questionnaires returned from leading laboratories have also disclosed that independent investigations of many so called "processing systems" have been conducted, that these processes have been found impractical, and that the bulk of all release film is now treated by the cold wax method. The committee reported as its finding that cold waxing, when properly done, is the most practical, economical, and satisfactory method.

Action of Council

Due to the absence of Mr. Hunter on account of sickness, the Council voted to table the report of the committee for further consideration at the next meeting, authorizing that in the meantime the committee may continue investigation at its discretion.

Industry Seeks to Halt Reel Doubling

In the ten-plank program for standardizing certain technical practices, as advocated by the Research Council of the Academy, the question of most concern to all branches of the industry is that of the proposed standardization of film reels from the present length of 1,000 to 2,000 feet. The Academy made the following announcement:

When the Academy "Standard Release Print Make-up" was put into effect November 1, 1930, no specification was included as to the length of the reel. The Standard Release Print proved to be correct from an engineering standpoint, it made perfect change-overs possible without rehearsal when it was maintained and used and it did bring uniformity in leader make-up among all companies in the business. However, as the amount of sound-on-film increased, projectionists grew careless about keeping the prints up to exact length. Many reels of less than 500 feet were distributed because of editorial difficulties. First class theatres adopted the practice of splicing two reels together in order to give smoother change-overs. Other theatres followed the practice because the projectionists thought it gave a better show or because the longer reels made their work easier.

In addition, more and more theatres cut down to one projectionist. It is not quite but almost a physical impossibility for one projectionist to run a smooth sound show and keep the reels in the lengths they come from exchanges.

As a result of all these circumstances, the exchanges, the theatre circuits, the unions and the producing companies have all been completely unable to stop doubling, although they have all tried and some companies have spent tens of thousands of dollars fighting the practice before giving up.

At present, the studios are cutting, printing and distributing reels of an average length of about 850 feet. Each reel has a standard leader. When these prints get to the theatres, the projectionist puts reels one and two together, three and four and so on. Before he returns the print to the exchange he is supposed to put the leaders back on again, cutting off more frames in the process. Directly or indirectly the theatres pay him for the time he takes to mount and separate these reels. The exchange then either makes some attempt to maintain the print with replacements or just checks the splices and sends it on to another theatre where the process is repeated.

The subcommittee of the Research Council now proposes that the industry make serious investigation of the possibility of releasing all features on larger reels. The size proposed is 13½ inches in diameter with a four-inch hub. This reel will carry a maximum of 1,700 feet but in actual practice the reels as released will average a little less than 1,500 feet just the same as now with a maximum of 1,000 feet they average a little less than 850 feet per reel.

Distribution on 13½-inch reels would, it is said, effectively and positively stop doubling of features. Projectionists would not attempt to put 3,000 feet and upwards in the projectors and would not have any justification for doing so.

The subcommittee believes that the annual savings will repay the costs of the changes in equipment in a comparatively short time and that a longer reel length would represent a big economy to the industry.

As studio operations are carried on in short lengths, the longer release reel would have virtually no effect of any kind during production. A reel of about 1,700 feet would be of great advantage in cutting. At present, more features are released in eight reels than any other length. The proportion is about five eight-reel features to four of seven reels, three of nine reels and one each of six and ten reels. This estimate is based on a survey of the last 20 releases from the six largest studios.

The effect of a 1,700-foot reel would be to not quite cut the number of reels on half. In general, features now requiring eight reels would require four on the new length and so on. This would mean that the cutters would have to find three and four change-overs per feature instead of six, seven or eight, as at present. In addition, they would have an average of well over 200 feet leeway in which to find change-over points in comparison with something like 100 feet average leeway per reel as at present.

In the laboratories a longer reel would cause no difficulties that could not be overcome by minor changes in manufacturing methods.

In the exchanges, the principal cost would be the cost of buying a large number of shipping cases.

In the theatres the longer reels should logically receive a welcome since projectionists have been insisting on doubling up. All Simplex, Powers and other standard makes of projectors will carry the 13½-inch reel. There may be some few projectors still in use that will not; the data on this are now being collected. Power re-winds, storage racks and other projection room equipment are either already suitable or would require only minor changes.

Disc release and foreign releases are two other important factors that will have to be taken into account. While there are very few exclusively disc accounts left, several of the companies still provide for them. Either these theatres would have to be converted to use movietone prints or records would have to be made of such pitch and size that they could play against the longer length of film.

Tonight Is Ours

Musical Romance

In story this is the kind of picture that used to delight the fans before the screen became audible—romance, gay and charming, built along story book lines, with everything happening just as expected and hoped. Accompanied by a catchy musical background, the show majors in love interest, which while always predominant is so constructed that there is logical opportunity for working out the accompanying dramatic suspense in a logical manner. The picture, elaborately staged and beautifully mounted, has its locales in Paris and the capital of a mythical European kingdom.

At a grand masque ball, Nadya (a princess incognito) and Sabien meet and fall in love. Their romance comes to the point of matrimony, when an ambassador from her country informs her that she must return and become the queen. Heart-broken Nadya dares not meet Sabien again, leaving him only a note.

At home, her country seethes with unrest. A diplomatic marriage is arranged. It appeals neither to the Queen nor to Prince Keri. At the railroad station to which she has gone to meet her bridegroom, an attempted assassination is foiled by Sabien, who could not resist the lure of seeing his loved one again. Not knowing who her savior is, Nadya consents to meet him. The meeting is both sweet and tragic, but the old love is kindled again, and Sabien returns to the palace to make good the title of the picture.

During their happy time together, the populace of the kingdom is in a turmoil. Krish is apprehensive. The mob swarm into the palace, demonstrate they love their queen and demand that she dispose of her old advisors and call off the international wedding. Granting their demands in return for one of her own—that she may marry Sabien, the "commoner"—everything is happy.

At first glance "Tonight Is Ours" may appear to be exclusively a woman's picture. It is full of love charm that will stimulate the imagination of every feminine heart who loves to day dream, yet it has so much clever entertainment that it should have more than usual interest for the men folk. While in some spots the dialogue is a bit too lengthy, it is loaded with lines that will make alluring ad copy. Fredric March offers his usual high class performance and Claudette Colbert is more pleasing and effective than in any of her more recent pictures. The remainder of the cast is more than acceptable. Without becoming sickly sentimental, the show offers grand opportunities to construct a romantic campaign. Clever but not too rigid dignity should be the working basis. And the use of Noel Coward's name in all exploitation should help draw in some of the irregular patrons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Wax Museum

(Warner)

Drama

Novel, though somewhat gruesome, "Wax Museum" nevertheless is a picture that contains plenty of entertainment that should appeal not only to the "horror" fans, but to the general rank and file of patrons as well. Use of Technicolor throughout, along the lines previously affected by Warner in "Dr. X" serves to concentrate deeper interest on the thrilling and sometimes comic dialogue and action of the picture.

Introduced in a sort of store-show, sideshow atmosphere, the story presents Igor as the creator and exhibitor of wax figures. Business being poor, his partner, Joe Worth, sets fire to the exhibit in order to collect the insurance. Igor, trying to protect his treasures, is horribly disfigured by burns and made mad by his experience. This sequence lays the foundation for the later horror episodes.

Years later, Igor opens the same kind of a museum in New York. Now quite mad, he makes his figures by a new process. Bodies are stolen from morgues and murder is committed to enable Igor to make his process casts along the exact contour of human bodies. The museum is the center of great interest, but the murders and body stealings excite strange stories about Igor and his creations. A newspaper editor, who is always looking for sensational stories, assigns his sob sister, Florence, to find out what she can. Considerable spasmodic, modern comedy between this pair and romance is opened up between Charlotte and Burton, a young sculptor in the employ of Igor.

A thrilling climax is reached as Igor attempts to murder Charlotte and transform her body into the model for a famous historical character. All the hullabaloo of police investigation and newspaper sensationalism is provided in the exposing and eliminating of the insane Igor.

Even though "Max Museum" is a horror story, the elements of novelty that have been incorporated into its screen treatment give it a decidedly different tinge than is ordinarily expected in this type of picture. Its emotion—stirring and thrilling drama provide an unusual appeal, and though the leading character is presented as, and understood to be a madman, whose idea of revenge is to make people pay for the original wrong that was inflicted upon him by Worth, the building of his character is such that mingled sympathy and fear are the ground work of the suspense.

More than ordinary exploitation and ballyhood ideas are suggested both by the title and context of the story. It will be strictly in line to transform your outer lobby into a replica of a wax museum, while the thrill and horror color of the picture should suggest some startling advertising and publicity copy.

Adults of both sexes will find more than enough in the way of startling excitement to interest them, but because of its gruesomeness, "Wax Museum" is a little too strong for juvenile patronage.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Half-Naked Truth

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

Lee Tracy contrives in this film to place another feather in his already well-filled cap by a crackling performance in a glove-fitting role as the big exponent of the great god Ballyhoo. The story comes via a recent tale of the exploits of the late famed press-agent of all press-agents, Harry Reichenbach, "Phantom Fame," and no opportunity has been lost in the screen adaptation to pack the picture with action plus.

The pace is extremely rapid, and should carry the audience along with the humor and fast dialogue of the show business of the shaky country carnival and the almost equally shaky "big time" revues under the white lights of Broadway.

Tracy is splendid, and the exhibitor can be sure he is well known to his audience through his previous performances. He gives all he has in a characterization of the ballyhoo man in the carnival whose fertile brain brings the money, and then brings him trouble. His pal is Eugene Pallette, carnival strong man, and his sweetheart is Lupe Velez, the carnival's oriental dancer. The three rush out of trouble and to the big town, with nothing to fortify them but Tracy's colossal nerve. Working his publicity to perfection, Tracy spots her into the revue of Frank Morgan, before Morgan can get his second wind. When Miss Velez's fame goes to her head and Tracy gets the cold shoulder, he proceeds, with the same spontaneous ingenuity, to dislodge Miss Velez from her pedestal and to substitute the hotel chamber maid, Shirley Chambers, as the leader of a "nudist" cult. She, also, he throws into Mor-

The names are good, led by Tracy and Miss Velez, and the performances excellent. The picture is fast, active and often highly amusing entertainment, but, above all, it is entertainment. Not very weighty, it has the sort of pep, vim and amusement, chiefly because of Tracy, which makes it really popular material. Exploitation possibilities are, naturally, unlimited. The carnival atmosphere, the big time show, the Tracy personality, exploitation of publicity as it is handled by Tracy with nerve, nerve and more nerve, offers an unusual selling opportunity. Ladies They Talk About

Drama

A strong straight-from-the-shoulder campaign, in which the leading cast names should predominate, is essential. Molded somewhat along the atmospheric lines of "Ladies of the Big House," the show treats mainly of the lives of women in jail. It stresses what they think of and do to while away the time; presents an odd picture of the social structure of the women's prison community in sequences that offer a vivid insight into the characters of the inmates, and also gives "Aunt Maggie" an opportunity to inject much laugh-provoking, if somewhat off-color, comedy.

Against this background of prison life is incorporated a romance between Nan and David Slade. This is brought about when Nan is nabbed as the decoy in a bank robbery and Slade, a radio-broadcasting reformer, meets her in the district attorney's office and recognizes her as an old childhood sweetheart. His moral scruples prevent him from making a deal with the D. A., and as a result, Nan gets a two to five year stretch, for the better part of a year of which she spurns Slade's pleas to see her.

During all this time, the picture is completely prison, but it veers sensationally when Don and Dutch also get a "rap" in San Quentin, and through the connivance of Lefty, Nan becomes a participant in the planned jail break. The attempt winds up in failure as the two convicts are killed in a tunnel that leads to Nan's cell. Her term extended, she plots revenge on Drake, now considered a stool pigeon, because she believes that a letter she gave him on the occasion she permitted a meeting was turned over to the cops by him.

Completing her sentence and returning to Los Angeles, she becomes one of the throng gathered at Slade's sort of male Aimee Semple MacPherson tabernacle, a gun concealed in her purse. In Slade's study, she takes a shot at him, but only wounds him. She finds she really loves her victim and he calms down the temple attaches and cops.

The picture shows much evidence of effort to get the most out of a difficult subject. The theme, even in its most colorful moments, is quite grim and effective selling of the picture requires use of the jail atmosphere which occupies most of its comparatively short running time. It can be made into a woman's picture that will have an appeal for men by making the best uses of the rather intriguing title, supported primarily by the cast names, followed up by interest-creating catch lines that let the public know it's a jail picture. Brighten this idea with a human interest line of copy that asks questions, such as: "What do they do—these forgotten women? What do they think about and dream and hope, these women behind grim walls who live and wish just as you wish, but with never a chance of realizing their wishes?" Judiciously handled, the idea of their isolation from society and the companionship of men might be just the angle to interest the male patronage but that depends upon how well you know your community. However, directing a campaign towards the feminine contingent should be productive of the best results.

The picture is absolutely adult fare. It is far too stern in both action and dialogue for juvenile entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Laughter in Hell

(Universal)

Drama

Universal makes its contribution to the current chain gang motion pictures, adapting an original story of the rather well-known Jim Tully, pointing sharply to the chain gang penal system of a southern state, taking a measure of the sting out of the indictment by setting the story in the early years of the century.

Little has been glossed over in attempting a graphic picture of conditions, methods. The picture becomes rather strong medicine for certain audiences when four Negroes are seen taken from their box-like cells and hanged from the limb of a tree while the other convicts look on, and there are sharp picturizations of the flogging of other prisoners.

The cast is reasonably good from a box office standpoint, and performs well. Pat O'Brien is in the lead, and is the victim of the chain gang. Merna Kennedy, Gloria Stuart, blondly attractive; Berton Churchill, Tom Brown are the names which have selling possibilities on the marquee. The cast is long but much of it is unknown.

A prologue sequence indicates the death of O'Brien's mother while he is a small boy, in a small southern town. He is under constant persecution from two Perkins brothers. The scene jumps to a period perhaps 10 years later, with O'Brien a railroad engineer. He marries Miss Kennedy, discovers that she is having an affair with one of the Perkins brothers, played by Arthur Vinton, and kills his wife and her lover. A life sentence in the chain gang brings the story to its point of focus. Perkins' brother, played by Douglas Dumbrille, is warden at the prison camp and O'Brien suffers as imagined when that fact is known. Hangings, floggings are part of the imparted background. The prisoners are sent to dig graves in a neighboring town when yellow fever breaks out in a plague. There, at night, under fire of the guards' rifles, they kill the warden, and many escape.

O'Brien comes upon the solitary Miss Stuart, orphaned by the plague, and the two make their way to safety and the film's happy ending.

The picture is not, obviously, for juvenile consumption, but has a certain amount of strength for the adult audience. That audience, however, should be advised of the type of story it will see. That same indication gives opportunity for exploitation of a strong character, based on the story's highlights as described. It would be well, perhaps, not to overdo the gruesomeness of certain of the chain gang methods and devices, for fear of alienating the feminine portion of the patronage, in particular. Heavy, the picture yet is entertaining in its own fashion, and should be made to do at least reasonably well at the box office.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Edward L. Cahn. From the novel by Jim Tully. Screen play by Tom Reed. Dialogue direction by Russell Hopton. Photographed by John Stumar. Release date, January 12, 1933. Running time, 68 minutes.

Hard To Handle

(Warner)

Comedy

Showmanship sticks out all over this show in capital letters. It's about a showman, Lefty Merrill, a publicity man and a promoter, with as many gags for making money as there are stars in the skies and it provides almost as many laughs. Comedy from start to finish, it also carries a sympathy creating romance, glows with a grand line of peppy dialogue and is as speedy as it is timely and novel.

Beginning with the final hours of a dance marathon, the hectic action is under way at once, as Lefty, the high-powered press agent of the marathon, is the big shot with the thousands of spectators who jam the dance hall and the apple of the eye of one of the contestants, Ruth. The whole thing blows up in a riot of mirth as Lefty's partner skips out with the prize money and Lefty "takes it on the lam," just a couple of jumps ahead of the irate mob. Early scenes indicate that Lil Waters, Ruth's mother, is going to be very prominent in that which is to follow and she is—so much so that, although Cagney is billed as the head liner, Ruth Donnelly almost steals the show and you can guarantee that she will hand your patrons scores of laughs.

A promoted treasure hunt on a pleasure pier also winds up in a riot as only $10 instead of the $5,000 that has been advertised is planted. As a hiatus the Lil Waters furniture selling episodes should bring the house down. The locale and excitement shift to New York. Lefty is broke; another big shot is making a play for Ruth and Lil is helping him along in grand style. A poor vanishing cream gives Lefty an idea. It won't "vanish," so he sells the manufacturers the idea of peddling it as a reducing cream and showmen are given another lesson in showmanship.

Raising a million for a jerk-water college is the next episode and Lefty is on easy street and riding high with Ruth and her mother. Publicizing "Grape Fruit Acres" a Florida real estate gag lands Lefty in jail for using the mails to defraud as the promoter skips out to South America. In his cell, he meets his old dance marathon pal, who is emaciated as the result of a grapefruit diet because he had nothing else to eat. His misfortune is only a heaven sent idea for Lefty.

As a result of his mammoth publicity campaign, the nation turns to grapefruit. The famous 18-day diet is rung in. So is the famous Paul Whiteman reducing accomplishment. "Grape Fruit Acres" becomes a gold mine for the investors, the charges are dropped, but the exciting fun is not finished until Lefty pulls a typical gag stunt on Ruth and her mother to accept him as one of the family.

Everything that has been described can be made the basis for a real interest-creating campaign in which everything from radio broadcasting, 24 sheeting, commercial tie-ups and gag exploitation down to teaser heralds can be used, as they are all used in the pictures. Use of those, however, even to the fullest extent, shouldn't be the limit of your business building campaign. "Hard to Handle," which should be easy to handle, is Cagney's first picture in months. He has proved his box office ability and with him taken out of his "tough mug" roles, it shouldn't be difficult to pick up on his established popularity. You can't afford to overlook Ruth Donnelly and, although her picture popularity is not great, you will find your patrons talking about her. Among the other things you do in connection with this picture, it might not be a bad idea to ring in somewhere in your advertising that it witnesses the beginning of a new star.

The show is real entertainment for any kind of a theatre. As it kept a large preview audience in spasms of everything from downright belly-laughs to emotion stirring smiles, it should do the same every place it is shown. It's great entertainment for the adults, yet at the same time is one of those pictures that you can shout about as suitable for the youngsters.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Son-Daughter

(MGM)

Drama

A tensely dramatic narrative of Chinese patriots' activity in San Francisco's Chinatown, adapted from the stage play by George M. Scarborough and David Belasco, "The Son-Daughter" offers another opportunity for Helen Hayes to display her splendid versatility and capacity as a dramatic actress.

Her name, naturally enough, becomes the best selling point in the picture, with due emphasis on the fact that she won the Academy actress award for performance during 1932. The rest of the cast is almost equally able, certainly each has an undoubtedly strong box office following, can be counted upon for money at the till when their names appear in the lights. Ramon Novarro, Lewis Stone, Warner Oland, Ralph Morgan, Louise Closser Hale and H. B. Warner, all are selling names.

Although it is true that the revolutionary activity in China is not at the moment in the public print in the same degree as was the Japanese aggression of some months ago, nonetheless currently there is some little attention being paid to the situation in the Far East. Do not lose any opportunity to capitalize on this factor as well as the star names.

The patriots in Chinatown are gathering money for the revolutionary cause despite great danger from the emperor's emissaries. Lewis Stone, Miss Hayes' father, is a leader in the "cause." Miss Hayes imparts a measure of lightness and amusement to the earlier scenes with her wholly charming characterization of the shy Chinese girl, with her mincing gait, her shy love-making with the Chinese boy, Novarro. A ship loaded with munitions is waiting to sail. A large sum of money is needed before it can leave the dock. Only by "selling" his daughter to the highest bidder can Stone obtain the money. Miss Hayes sacrifices her love to the cause, and Novarro, a prince, does likewise. Oland is the highest bidder, taking the girl, killing her father and her lover. Rising to the crisis, Miss Hayes strangles Oland with his own queue, finds the money, and is seen at the close, with set face, sailing to aid the revolution aboard the munitions ship. Her dramatic performance reaches its height, is tremendously effective in the strangling scene. Thus she becomes her father's "son-daughter," having done her share in the manner of a worthy son.

Indicate in the selling the motif of sacrifice of love and of self for the cause of their fathers on the part of Miss Hayes and Novarro. Bring in the current interest in the Chinese situation, concentrate on the splendid cast and the performances, and declare emphatically and with assurance, that Miss Hayes here adds another splendid performance to her already impressive list. Properly sold from these several excellent angles, the picture should be good for an unusual result at the box office. Lobby display opportunities for the attraction of pedestrian attention are likewise excellent.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Clarence Brown. From the play by George M. Scarborough and David Belasco. Screen play by John Goodrich and Claudine West. Dialogue by Leon Gordon. Film editor, Margaret Booth. Photographed by Oliver T. Marsh. Release date, December 23, 1932. Running time, 79 minutes.

Nagana

(Universal)

Weird

Using a dramatic theme that is suggestive of the anti-climactic scenes of "Arrowsmith," surrounding it with the atmosphere of the jungle animal picture cycle, introducing a weird romance through the personality of Tala Birell (another Garbo-Dietrich combination) and laying the whole thing down in the heart of darkest Africa, "Nagana" appears to be ordinary program entertainment.

Modern science, represented by the first two doctors, is waging a battle against the dread "nagana"—sleeping sickness. Savage superstition is personified by Nogu, an English university graduate, and his father, The King. On the spot in the native village unless he can prove his science more efficient than the superstitution of the Medicine Men in saving the life of The King, and after a roundup of wild animals, Randon has further troubles as the savages find the Countess, who has trailed his safari into the jungle. Convinced that she is a demon responsible for all their afflictions, they determine to slay her. Randon intervenes. A lot of dramatic hokus-pokus ensues, but the King dies and amid a lot of excitement the tribesmen are going to throw the white girl to the crocodiles. Randon saves her, of course, but the drama is not convincing even though it is quite thrilling. Then comes the typical struggle back to civilization.

This picture did not register well with the preview audience, which tittered in the most unexpected places. By its nature there is opportunity for atmospheric ballyhoo which may strengthen the straight title and cast billing.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Ernst L. Frank. From the story by Lester Cohen. Screen play by Dale Van Every and Don Ryan. Photographed by George Robinson. Release date, January 9, 1933. Running time, 74 minutes.

SHORTS

Technocracy

(Mascot)

Good

This is probably the first exposition of the plan sponsored by the socalled technocrats, to establish a completely new economic life in America based on the country's energy resources. Produced by Bryan Foy Corporation, the picture employs an after-dinner speech by Professor Gilbert Brown to convey the message of technocracy. Flashes of printing presses, looms, harvesters and ships emphasize Professor Brown's point of the ultimate breakdown of our present economic system. The several questions asked by guests serve to direct the discussion along lines of public interest. The steadily increasing curiosity about technocracy can be readily used as a basis for promotion.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial

(Paramount)

Good

This short pictorial shows some of the really grand scenery of the California redwood forests. It is done in full color and conveys a real sense of the grandeur of these giant trees. The depths of the forest is streaked with glowing bars of sunlight as the camera takes the traveler down a winding road. A really good pictorial.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Time On My Hands

(Paramount)

Fair

Ethel Merman sings the song, perched on the hour hand of a gigantic clock. The photographic ideas are fairly clever; the music well played. As in others in the series, the bouncing ball is introduced to lead the audience in singing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Belles of Bali

(Fox)

Interesting

Interesting is this subject in the Fox "Magic Carpet of Movietone" series, wherein is depicted the life of the Balinese, inhabitants of that island paradise in the Pacific where things move slowly, where festivities and ceremonials are the dominant features of activity, and where the motion picture camera has recently penetrated with its inquisitive eye. The subject is well executed, the subject matter provides an engaging picture of how another people lives. A good short for almost any program.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Chalk Up

(MGM)

Skillful

In this number of the Sport Champion series, Willie Hoppe, for many years world's champion billiard player, gives evidence of his remarkable skill with the cue and ivories. He almost makes them talk as he executes, apparently with the greatest of ease, the most difficult of cushion shots in billiards and weird examples of his skill on the pool table. The cue player will rave about this, while the average picture-goer will sit in awe of such uncanny accuracy.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Boston Common—and Proper

(Central Films)

Average

Just another collection of air views and close-ups of a city whose importance in revolutionary days does not necessarily carry over to modern scenes. Off-screen narration is uninspired.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Gaslit Nineties

Novelty

The public that likes shots of the early days of the industry should get some fun out of this Johnnie Walker novelty in which the running comment in the dialogue background brings out the contrast of past and present with a laugh.—Running time, 8 minutes.

HIGHLIGHTS OF 1932 PASS IN REVIEW

A panoramic re-viewing of the year that is now beyond the horizon presents more than its quota of lights—and shadows. The motivation by new forces that was already evident early in 1931 gained even further momentum as the year 1932 got under way and the close of the twelve-month found the spirit of change extending its range into all primary fields of the institution that is the motion picture. Relative business done in motion picture theatres in the week preceding Christmas in 1932 and 1931 is shown in the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office receipts. The vertical white bar represents the gross in each city for the week ending December 17 in each year, as the 100 per cent starting point for the comparison. The gross for the week ended December 24 in 1931 is shown by the shaded bar, and the receipts for the same week in the year just closed are pictured with the black bar.

HIGH SCHOOLS TO VIEW FOREIGN-MADE FILMS

International Cinema League Gets Non-Theatrical Distribution Rights for 85 Per Cent of Foreign Talkers Shown in U. S.

Entrance of the International Cinema League into the rapidly developing educational film movement is expected to lead to an expansion of the foreign motion picture market in the United States. Formed to serve as a central, authoritative source of European pictures for schools and colleges, the League successfully has negotiated non-theatrical distribution rights for about 85 per cent of the foreign talking pictures shown in this country. Product of a number of importers and independent distributors has been obtained, including foreign releases of Protex-Ufa, Tobis Forenfilms (except in California); Capital Foreign Attractions, Institut fur Kulturforschung, J. H. Hoffberg and Julie Elias.

Cooperation with the Board of Education in New York, recently announced by Edward B. Ginsburg, director of the League, has resulted in a program of special Saturday morning showings for high school and junior high school students. Three experimental Saturday morning screenings held thus far have been attended by some 6,000 students representing schools throughout Greater New York. Students paid to see the pictures, which were in German, French and Spanish and were exhibited under the joint sponsorship of the Department of Modern Languages of New York's Board of Education and the International Cinema League.

Special monthly showings in each language are to be held in 10 key school districts throughout the city. Not only will films of purely pedagogical interest be distributed, but also selected European theatrical films which are both entertaining and convey the flavor of European life and customs.

A direct tieup is made in the course with the pictures seen by students, in that respect placing the program in a category not unlike that of a similar project now being conducted among 10,000 high school students under the direction of the National Council of Teachers of English. In this case, however, the interest is primarily the study of languages, with the added opportunity of acquiring some knowledge of Continental cities.

Members of the Board of Education in New York review foreign pictures made available through the League and select certain productions to be seen by the students in foreign language courses. The rating of pictures thus made in the East will, it is expected, later be adapted to the entire country and extra-curricular showings will be held regularly under the direction of the school authorities in key cities. That the New York reviewers will have a sufficient number of pictures from which to choose is practically assured through the League's list of 60 to 70 foreign films that it has available through member companies.

The foreign film market thus far has to overcome the language handicap which came through sound, but it is expected that with the growth of reproducing installations in educational institutions the demand for European pictures will increase accordingly. To date, foreign film sales have been confined to the socalled "little theatre" division, except in a few instances.

JENKINS' COLYUM

San Marcos, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

Another Christmas and we are sixteen hundred miles from our base of supplies, and there isn't a chimney in Texas where we could hang up our sock. Down here they all use gas stoves.

Our old friend Zimmerman has invited us out to his house for a turkey dinner today and after that we are to play a round of golf. Think of it, Oscar, golf on Christmas day. We have this satisfaction on being away from home on Christmas, however, we won't hear our wife say, "Hey, there, you go down in the furnace room and stoke that furnace and carry out the ashes."

There are two things we thoroughly enjoy (we don't think): Carrying out ashes and beating rugs, and next to those comes three or four more rugs.

Everytime Christmas comes around we wonder if that Santa Claus myth is really a good thing when we think of the thousands of poor kids who will be expecting Santa to visit them only to be disappointed. If we had a million dollars we'd be glad to spend all of it to buy a little Christmas cheer for those poor unfortunate children who never saw Santa. Down in the Rio Grande valley we saw little Mexican children running around barefooted in the mud and slush. They have heard of Santa, no doubt, but have never seen him, and the remembrance of the condition of these poor children makes Christmas a rather sad day for us. But on the other hand we remember that "Unto us a Christ is born, unto us a Savior given" and this should make all men rejoice.

One of our regrets is that last night we were not where we could slip something into the stockings of Bennie and Catherine and Billy and Joline, but then, no doubt, Meryl and Florence and Walt and Marjorie will look after that, and then we expect grandma and Ruth to have a hand in that also.

Down in Brownsville the other day a couple of colored fellows met on the street and one said to the other, "Say, Sam, what kind of a clock was dat yo wife dun brung home the other day, huh?" And Sam replied, "Well, Mose, dat am what da calls a eight-day clock, and Ah specks hit am, kaze Ah dun winds hit twice a day now fo eight days."

To read all those familiar names in "What the Picture Did for Me" is just like getting letters from home. We know about every one of them west of Pennsylvania personally, and every name calls to mind something familiar. For instance, there's Mayme P. Musselman of the Princess theatre at Lincoln, Kansas. She's the star cook of the Sunflower state and the mother of that little girl who went to sleep on our lap watching Tom Mix do his stuff. Then there is Horn & Morgan of Hay Springs, Nebraska, that's where they raise the big potatoes.

S. H. Rich of the Rich theatre at Montpelier, Idaho, gets in with some reports. We remember S. H. and his Rich theatre, they are both right up to date. A. E. Handcock of the Columbia theatre at Columbia City, Indiana, is another contributor. The Ohio and Indiana state line splits Columbia City right in two. A. E. bought us a coca cola when we were there last summer. Thanks, old timer. We note that Gerald Stettmund of Chandler, Oklahoma, kept his promise and sent in some reports. This is a surprise to us for it's the first time he was ever known to keep a promise.

In commenting on one picture, Don Monroe of the State theatre at Lincoln, Nebraska, certainly handed us a laugh when he said that the reviewer of the picture in Liberty who gave the picture four stars must have been hit on the head with a hammer for he saw three stars too many. Leave it to Don, he can tell 'em. Our experience has been that when a fan magazine reviewer gives a picture four stars it would be wise for the exhibitor to examine it with both eyes before booking it.

There is one good thing that department has done if nothing else, it has awakened Walt Bradley, that lazy son-in-law of ours at Neligh, Nebraska, and that's sumpin'. We didn't suppose dynamite would do that.

There are several thousand of other familiar names we hope to see in that department. Maybe they will come later on; we hope they do.

Well, we had that turkey dinner and then that golf game. We were the star performer at that dinner, but when we got on the golf course that guy Zim made a monkey and two baboons out of us and then laughed at us, and there was no darn sense in a fella treating a friend that way.

After the game we went back to Zim's house and finished what was left of that turkey. Zim beat some eggs up into a froth and put something into it that was hardly in line with the 18th Amendment and told us it was a special preparation of his for weak-minded people. He suggested that we take three doses of it. Then he said, "You know, Jaysee, that I'm a Democrat." We stopped him right there and said, "Well, you don't need to say that, anybody would know that from looking at you."

Well, it was a good dinner and a good golf game, and with these delightful people our Christmas was not so dull even though we were sixteen hundred miles from home.

At Gonzales we met Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Smith who operate the Princess theatre, two delightful folks who seemed to be pleased that we called. They invited us to come back and spend the night with them, and we may do it, for we know there would be a most delightful evening in store for us. It's a real pleasure to meet such folks. In fact, most of these Texas people are like that.

H. G. Stein of the Princess theatre at Luling also wants us to come back when we can stay longer. He wants to have a game of golf with us, but these Longhorns have made a monkey out of us long enough. We've put our clubs away for the winter, and so——

We're heading north where blizzards blow,
Where the streets are covered up with snow,
No matter if it's snowing.
So let it snow to beat the Dutch,
For we don't mind the snow so much,
For it's HOME, that's where we're going.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones—Jones doesn't drive them out of the theatre after you get a couple of them in to see his show but it certainly is poison for me to try to run a show with a western "shoot-em-up feature." They just don't want to pay money to see that kind of a story.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

THE NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou and Mayo Methot—Good murder mystery. Played Dec. 13-14.—C. M. Hartman. Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy and Constance Cummings — A great picture that pleased those I could get in to see it. Poor business. Tried to get a date before election but by the time I got it politics had cooled off. Played Dec. 8-9.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthlemess—This is a very pleasing picture, but not as big as I thought it would be. Did a little above average business. Played Dec. 14-15.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR X: Lionel Atwill and Fay Wray—One of the best of the shocker mystery pictures. Insist on getting the color print, as it is much better than the black and white. This picture drew good business for two days and pleased. After some of the mystery pictures we had run ahead of this one that is indeed surprising. Running time, 77 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

Fox

AMATEUR DADDY: Warner Baxter, Marion Nixon —Swell picture which pleased everyone. Better than "Daddy Long Legs." Looks like Marion Nixon is getting as popular as Janet Gaynor. She is here. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1.—Bob Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—What marvelous comeback this great little star has made. It's a swell picture and your patrons will like it. I played it a few days before Christmas and failed to get them in. Am going through the usual fire. Christmas slump in business and this year it's very bad. Played Dec. 19-20.—R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe and Irene Ware—For those under 15 years and all those who read detective and mystery stories, this is the best picture ever made. If you can pick your crowd, this will go big. One sure thing is that the kids will eat it up. It did not draw for us even though our local radio station had broadcast this feature for months each day. I have yet to run a picture with a radio tieup and get results. Played Dec. 21-22. Running time, 71 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Good picture of its kind to poor business. Played Dec. 6-7.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: (Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson)—Pulled like a last year's mustard plaster, but those who came seemed to like it. Played it too close to another of the same type. Business poor. Okay for kids and ought to pull in many communities.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—This star means nothing to our patrons and this is not his best picture. Business just average and film rental far too high. Okay for kids, but adults were not too enthusiastic.—M. R. Harrington ,State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Drew well for three days and we all considered it one of Roger's best. Not as funny as some of the others, but it is jammed with good common horse sense and entertainment.—M. W. Lamour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Drew a bit better than usual and very well liked. Made all of us feel a little better. Played Dec. 4-5.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—This one pulled and pleased so that's that. Okay for family trade.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Wrong kind of picture for Gaynor-Farrell. Just average box office. Did not please. Too much fussing. People like those two in sweet, clean romances.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—A high class western that is good for Sunday or any day and it will please all. The acting is good and the get up of the picture is fine in places, but the director slipped in some places by using shots that were taken some other time and the people didn't match with the later scenes. The audience will hardly note it. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 74 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers and Ben Lyon—Exceedingly clever comedy drama.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GIRL: Spencer Tracy and Joan Bennett—The poorest Fox picture in many months. Would advise only one day showing. Played Dec. 21. —R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen — Failed to please the majority. Played Dec. 18-19.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe—It is just a bunch of foolishness about gangsters and racketeers muscling into football. Several times it seems on the verge of becoming a great picture but somehow fails to make the grade. However, it is a good idea and better than the average.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marion Nixon—Maybe our patrons are too sophisticated for this type of play, or can it be that "Rebecca" has lost her pull? At any rate, we did not do business above average and they laughed in the wrong places. Okay for kids and no doubt fine for some towns.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Good small town picture. Pleased but poor business because of snow storm and pre-Christmas. Played Dec. 21-22-23.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—The role fits Rogers like a glove. Good picture. Played Dec. 14-15-16.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Usual good picture from Rogers. Drew a fine holiday business Thanksgiving Day and patrons were well pleased. Not quite as funny as some of his former pictures. Played Nov. 24-25.—R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

Majestic

THE PHANTOM EXPRESS: William Collier, Jr., and Sally Blane—This is a very good railroad melodrama. Everybody liked it, plenty of action and a good story. Both sound and photography fine. Played two days to very good business.—John Honthaner. Comet Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert and Virginia Bruce—Acting okay in this one, but story rather weak. Interest centered on Bruce as latest Mrs. Gilbert. No special pulling power.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: (All star)—Did about what an ordinary program picture would do with the advertising we put out on it. It is well acted and produced and plenty of stars for drawing power, but it is not the picture for the movie goers of a small town. The picture has had too much ballyhoo, in my opinion. Where all the big critics can give it the rating they did, I can't see it. Played Dec. 18-19-20. Running time, 115 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—I did more business with a western picture in one night than I did with Metro's great masterpiece, "Grand Hotel," in three nights and I played both pictures the same week at the same admission price. Metro forced me to run it three nights but they should have made it at least a week and I might have made film rental out of it. Have never shown a picture that received so much unfavorable comment. People even knocked it that had never seen it. Personally I thought it a good picture but not the special production Metro would lead you to believe. Played Dec. 7-8-9.—R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff and Lewis Stone—Very good for week-day runs. Will satisfy those who like horror pictures. Played Dec. 22-23.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy—It was the first Laurel and Hardy comedy run in this theatre for some years, so patrons did not know them so well but it did fair at the box office. It is a picture that will please most everyone. Play up to the kids on it. Played Dec. 11-12-13. Running time, 69 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy—I played this one on a Saturday midnight show and they ate it up. It is a much better picture than "Pardon Us." Played Dec. 17.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler and Polly Moran—A splendid picture. Will do your house good to run it. Played Dec. 18-19.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—A little too torrid for the kids and family trade, but it pulled for us. Some patrons thought it silly and others thought it good entertainment. Business above average. Harlow a favorite in this house.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—Drew fair at the box office. An adult picture and not for children. The acting is very good and the picture seemed to please. Played Dec. 4-5-6. Running time, 83 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer and Fredric March—A very beautiful picture. Shearer's best this year. Played Dec. 16-17.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer and Fredric March—Considered excellent except by a few who like westerns rather than sob stuff. Played Dec. 13-14-15.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

UNASHAMED: Helen Twelvetrees — Splendidly acted drama of a not too original story. Held interest to those who came, but business was not above average.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: (Radio stars)—I played this in terrible weather and as a result it didn't do big business, but it certainly did please everyone and many people said it was the best picture I had run in a year. I am going to try and bring it back when the weather is better, as I know a lot of people would come to see it again. Played Dec. 11-12.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams and radio stars—Best entertainment in month. Great from start to finish—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Very good show. Marlene Dietrich is like good whiskey, "she improves with age."—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—There's only one Dietrich and she is in a class by herself in her particular type of acting ability. Dickie Moore is wonderful. The picture is great. Played Dec. 18-19. Running time, 93 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP: Tallulah Bankhead and Gary Cooper—Just the old eternal triangle plot all disguised for deep sea diving. Charles Laughton took honors for acting from the billed stars. Not for children, but they came. Just average business.—M. R. Hartman, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

FOLLOW THE LEADER: Ed Wynn—I played this one two years ago and didn't do any business on it. Since then Wynn has popularized himself over the radio. I just brought it back on bargain night and it was the best bargain night business in three months. Everybody laughed loud and long including myself. Get it and spot it in and see if I'm not right. Played Dec. 27.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Small town patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe—Too many "hell" titles lately, so this was just another average picture. Did hold interest and those who came went out satisfied.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Very good little program picture. Carroll does a clever bit of acting. Business decidedly off on this one. Woman radio announcer panned this picture so hard that it absolutely ruined its drawing power. Played Nov. 14.—R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton, Richard Arlen, Leila Hyams—Was the first in this territory to play this one. Satisfied most of our audience on account of it being different from the ordinary run of stories. Weird but has plenty of comedy relief. Miss Burke very good in her first role as the Panther Woman. Played Dec. 24.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft, Wynne Gibson—Dandy program picture. Pleased on Saturday night. George Bancroft and Wynne Gibson do very good work. Some comedy in picture.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

MADAME RACKETEER: Alison Skipworth—Held off playing this, but found when I did, it had some pulling power. Pleased everyone and pulled far above average.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

MAN FROM YESTERDAY: Clive Brook and Claudette Colbert—Not worth going back after though if "The Sign of the Cross" should make box office draw out of Colbert, who I think should be one, it will be worth digging up. It is a good program picture, if you know what I mean.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—A swell picture. The cast was faultless and is this boy Raft "acoming?" Just watch him. A story with plenty of thrills and human interest. Not enough gang stuff to hurt. Played Dec. 14-15. Running time, 72 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—This is another gangster picture but the love interest is emphasized and Raft gives a good, entertaining performance.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft and Constance Cummings—I consider "Night After Night" Paramount's best release to date. Boost it. Played Nov. 12.—R. W. Heckman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. Small town patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook—Here is one swell picture and it will send them out pleased. Played it Christmas week and while we did not do quite average business, that could not be attributed to the picture. Patrons were plenty loud in their praises. If you have this one coming, step on it and let your patrons know about it. It's worth all you may do for it.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan, Jimmie Durante and Claudett Colbert—Certainly was a great comedy with plenty of action and holds the interest to the end. Played Dec. 16-17. Running time, 78 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Charles Ruggles and Phillips Holmes—One of the finest mystery pictures in a long time. Drew only average business, but pleased everyone. Ruggles good for many laughs as inebriate radio announcer.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

VANISHING FRONTIER: John Mack Brown—Not a regular western, but a story of old California. This was especially liked by our people. The first real cold weather held down the attendance, but if you want a charming love story coupled with action get this picture. Played Nov. 11-12. Running time, 69 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Dorothy Wilson—Used this for a Saturday midnight show and it went over all right. Glad we did not play it on a run of even two days, for it is nothing to rave about. Some sizzling situations and dialogue made it unsuitable for kids. Business not so good.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Those who like drama without one moment of comedy in the 76 minutes, will eat this one up, and for fine acting by a fine cast there has been nothing better in a long time. We played it on Sunday and Monday and it drew little below average business, but bad weather no doubt cut some business. The picture pleased all except the younger set. Played Dec. 18-19. Running time, 76 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Extra good drama, but no box office.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—A very fine picture that will please the women and some men who like real drama and very fine acting. It is a picture that you can step on and you should do the business for they will talk about it and boost it for you. Play it, by all means. Played Nov. 29-30-Dec. 1. Running time, 69 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore and Billie Burke—Divided opinion. Fair crowd. Quite a number seemed to have heard there was some splendid acting in this one. Played Dec. 20-21-22.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio—Above average business and picture entertained, but it was not "Bird of Paradise" as the older patrons remembered it. Beautiful scenic background and music, but whole thing decidedly unconvincing. Would not recommend for smaller children, but they came.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregan. Suburban patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—Played this ahead of "Congorilla" and did better than average business. Picture aroused some adverse criticism from women patrons who considered the scenes between the python and tiger too strong for nerves. Certainly not a "special" for us, but in other communities should pull. Okay for older children.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

GHOST VALLEY: Tom Keene—A new type of western with plenty of mystery mixed into it. Plenty of action, suspense and thrills. Good Saturday picture. Played Dec. 23-24. Running time, 55 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—This did not get over. It opened to good business and then went down to nothing the second day. The drop was caused by those who saw it the first day and going out and knocking it. The women were very much displeased with this one. It's a rather brutal thing at that, and I do not think it good entertainment for any crowd. Played Dec. 14-15. Running time, 80 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—The men and children thought it was swell but it didn't get over with the women. Didn't bring anything extra into the box office. Played Dec. 16-17.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—While this team is not too well liked by our patrons, this picture did pull better than average. They laughed plenty and we had no kicks. Personally thought it their best picture since "Rio Rita." Okay for kids.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—This is good fun. Cast is fine and the crowd expects slapstick comedy and gets it "aplenty."—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Leslie Banks and Joel McCrea—This is thrilling and well produced but did not draw the crowd nor bring others back for the second night. It just hasn't got the heart interest to appeal.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix, Gwili Andre—Good action picture, pleased our Saturday crowd. Played Dec. 16-17.—Bob Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen and Gloria Stuart—Good football picture. Played Dec. 4-5.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne—Booked this almost cold, but at that it did far above average business. One of the finest pictures we have ever played and the raves were plenty, especially from the women. Not for kids.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—The best picture that Universal has put on the market for some time. It's a picture that will please and your people will tell you, also your friends, about it. The acting in the picture is first rate. Played Dec. 25-26. Running time, 88 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

IGLOO: (Native cast)—Comments not favorable but I had faith in it. Advertised it and talked it up. It was well liked. Three teachers brought pupils. People who had seen it are still talking of it. Those who did not see it are sorry.—Mrs. George Thomsen, Garden Theatre, Arthur, Ill. Small town patronage.

LAW AND ORDER: Walter Huston—A very good western with plenty of action and very good acting. One that will please all. Played Dec. 9-10. Running time, 73 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

MY PAL THE KING: Tom Mix—My dainty little girl patrons liked it. Thought it was sweet. The boys and the grown ups thought it too juvenile and "kindergartenish." The producers seem to have overlooked the fact that Mix did not attain his popularity playing in such pictures as "My Pal the King."—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

Warner

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—The best of the Arliss pictures in the lighter vein. Pulled way above average and made many pleased patrons. Good clean comedy, free from smut and the old sex stuff. Why can't we have more like this? Fine for family trade.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—This is fine entertainment. Old and young will enjoy it if you can get the youth to come and see Arliss. A very pleasing picture for the entire family as it deals with the good old family problem of holding the flock together.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy and Mary Brian—Tracy makes history with this one. He is the whole show and a very good one. It is snappy and perhaps will shock some, but the real humor in the show will make most completely overlook the low moral tone or perhaps we should say the lack of moral tone.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

THE EXPERT: "Chic" Sale, Dickie Moore—Good picture which pleased nearly all who saw it. Played

Nov. 12.—Bob Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell and Kay Francis—This is good entertainment. The ending is rather hidden, but not punishing and the dramatic interest is constant throughout the entire show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. Dakota. Small town patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Charles "Chic" Sale—Not a particular favorite with our patrons, but this pulled very well. It pleased most everyone. Good clean story and fine for kids.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett—Bennett is a natural for us, but this is far from her best picture. They came plenty, but went out not too satisfied. Business fine.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Suburban patronage.

SINGING PLUMBER: Donald Novis—Absolutely great for us. Many people stayed to hear it the second time. TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 154.—(A) Do different metals offer varying degree of resistance to electric current? (B) Does the resistance of all metals used in conducting current increase as temperature is increased? (C) Name something used under some conditions to conduct current which has less resistance at high than at low temperature. (D) Name some other things which have less resistance to electric flow when hot than when cold.

Answer to Question No. 148

Bluebook Question No. 148 was: (A) Explain in some detail just why alternating current will provide far less illumination for projection purposes than will an equal amperage of direct current, other things being equal. (B) Tell us, so far as you know, just why a. c. provides different color or tone of light than does d. c., using an arc of course. (C) Is the light from either a. c. or d. c. continuous in brilliancy?

Sorry, men, but the list of those answering correctly is short. Here it is: G. E. Doe, S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, B. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Dale Danielson, H. D. Schofield, J. Wentworth, A. Breston and G. Lombard and T. Toor and P. L. Davis. The shortest list I can remember.

Concerning Section A, I believe T. Wentworth's answer ranks perhaps highest. He says:

"There are several things enter into this matter, but of course the chief one is the fact that the power of the current is, by reason of its alternations, divided equally between the two carbon tips, instead of being all concentrated upon one, as with d. c. Naturally this results in two small light sources (craters) instead of one only, one of which is, for reasons any projectionist well understands, wholly available for motion picture projection. It is possible to use both craters, but only with inefficiency. Experience has taught that decidedly better result in screen illumination is had by using only one a. c. crater.

"Another point is that since an a. c. projection arc is of necessity much shorter (distance carbon tip to carbon tip) than is the d. c. arc of equal amperage, there will be added shadow interference by the lower carbon tip, as compared with the d. c. arc. Still a third thing is the fact that the very small a. c. crater is much more difficult to maintain at the best, most efficient angle for projection, as well as to maintain in the most perfect shape generally.

"On the other hand, all this is to some extent (I do not know exactly to what extent and would like to hear from you on this point) offset by the fact that light from the a. c. arc has a higher power of penetration and, aside from quality of light tone effect, therefore has higher power of screen illumination. Up to this time I have seen no comparative measurements of screen illumination by a. c. and d. c. arcs. They would certainly be interesting. How about it, Mr. Editor?"

(B) I believe G. E. Doe did best on this one. He says:

"The chief reason for difference in light tone as between a. c. and d. c. arcs is because of different chemicalization of the carbon cores. A minor reason is, I believe, that the great amount of gas produced by d. c. arcs tends to soften the light, imparting to it an amber tone. The new National Carbon book, page 36, says, 'The alternating current arc between neutral cored carbon tips affords less than half as much usable light as the d. c. arc of equal electrical input, and the color is more yellow, due to the lower temperature of the carbon tips,' which information I am myself unable to see the value of."

What National says in the book is quite all right, but is a bit confusing in this instance for the reason that we do not any longer use neutral-cored carbons for projection purposes. As to a. c. carbon arc carbon tips having a somewhat lower temperature than the positive of a d. c. arc of equal amperage, it seems reasonable—though since in both cases the volatilization point or temperature of carbon must be reached, it does not seem that the difference could be sufficient to affect the color of the light very much. We would appreciate hearing from the National Carbon Company Engineering Department further on this point.

(C) I think friend Van Vaulkenburg has perhaps a bit the best of it on this one. He says:

"Light from neither a. c. nor d. c. is continuous in brilliancy, if we accept 'continuous' to mean constant and unvarying in brilliance. First, considering a carbon arc, we all know there are fluctuations of considerable amount caused by impurities in the carbons, by differences in structure in different parts of individual carbons, by air drafts and by voltage fluctuations; also, in modern practice, since carbon feeding apparatus does not actually maintain always an exactly even gap, there are differences set up in illumination.

"But aside from all this, a. c. has one dead period each cycle, which means 60 dead periods per second with 60-cycle current, or 25 with 25-cycle current. Certainly such voltage fluctuations must and do set up a condition where brilliancy cannot possibly be constant, even though it may seem so to the eye. D. c., on the other hand, has no periods of dead voltage, but has pulsations, and these pulsations do theoretically affect the light, making it less than constant in brilliancy. However, I doubt that it really does so, for the reason that these pulsations are very slight and enormously rapid—so much so that I do not believe their effect can possibly be communicated to the floor of the crater sufficiently to set up temperature variation, and if my idea be right, then so far as the current itself is concerned, the d. c. light may be accepted as constant. I believe also that the same idea holds good when we consider incandescent lighting. Will you give us your views on this?"

Correcting Two Errors

Gosh, all hemlock! I've been swamped with roasts by mail for a week or so past. The second error, this time just a stupid one, in a month! Oh, well, fellers, anyhow you can't say I get that way often. Can't remember a printed one for a long, long while, until these two.

In answering a question propounded by Brother Dale Danielson of Russel, Kan., in his answer to Section C of Question 146, in the Bluebook School of the December 10th issue, I said: "You have overlooked the fact that the low period (a. c.) comes only at the end of each cycle."

Now I really think you will all agree that I knew better than that. It was an unfortunate, inexcusable mental lapse. A low period of course occurs at the end of each alternation, and since there are (25-cycle current under consideration) 50 alternations per second, there would be $50 \times 60 = 3{,}000$ low periods per minute.

Also in the same answer, the word "or" at the end of the third line of Lester Borst's answer to Section B, should have been "and." My carbon copy shows that to be a misprint not chargeable to me.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

KAYOED BY A BUG!

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, but we had a little set-to with Kid Bug of the grippe bugs and he floored us for about a count of nine. As a result we've been fightin' a hundred and three fever for the last ten days and having a rather hectic time of it to boot.

As we dreamt our fever-tossed dreams we pictured many unusual things; such as S R O signs out over the box office every night; bosses who let us run our theatres as we thought best; no home office red tape to bother with; a day off every week, free from worry; several salary increases that brought our weekly stipend back to where it was B. C. (Before circuits). And after dreaming all of these nice things we awoke to learn that we had been delirious. Oh well; one would have to be delirious to imagine such swell things actually happening.

TEN DAYS ON YOUR back is a long time and affords ample opportunities to dwell upon the things to be and so we've been mentally going over the territory to be covered bv the forthcoming Ohio trek. After visiting with Nat Holt and his RKO pace-setters we're gonna amble over to Newark to see what Ed Heihle's claims to the Hall of Fame are all about. Then of course Mansfield will be a necessary stop to look up among others, Tim Roberts, that grand ol' man of showbusiness. Youngstown is also on the itinerary unless something intervenes, so we'll be seein' you "Sig" Solomon.

Just how many other spots we will be able to make is going to depend on time and our now shaky frame. If the trip don't become too strenuous we'll try to look in on a few dozen others. After reading what Red Kann had to say about the key spots we have a real hankering to know what some real show-towns look like; having always been a firm believer in the fact that real showbusiness can only be found outside of the key cities.

AND NOT TOO FAR in the offing is that five or six week trip into the Southlands. (Someone please sing "Dixie".) It looks as though we will finally make good a three year old threat to visit with Frank Boucher, Walter Morris, Bill Brock and about fifty other southern showmen, many who are Charter Members of the Club and staunch supporters ever since its inception. The Southern states have always been important so far as the Round Table is concerned because of the fine spirit the members down there have always shown. Those who read the Club pages carefully will recall dozens of regular contributors from south of the Mason-Dixon line.

And at the end of the Southern trip will be the glorious beach of Miami and such pals as Hal Kopplin, Sonny Shepherd, Mike Vogel, J. H. McKoy and all those others whose names just don't come to mind for the moment. And from Miami we are looking forward to the Timiami trail over to Tampa where Jesse Clarke and the other Sparks business builders hold forth. It's been a good many years since we navigated that trail across Florida.

ONE OF THE MOST soothing medicines during our incarceration was the twenty two hundred holiday cards which were sent up from the office for me to look through. What a thrill that was; imagine, twenty-two hundred showmen who remembered us during one of the worst slump holiday seasons that the business has ever experienced. Well, to each and every one of those boys—and girls—who so thoughtfully sent a card we extend our sincere thanks and we want you all to know that it went a long ways towards killing that fever and shoving us along the road to recovery.

WELL, WITH A MEAN case of the grippe finally beaten and now rarin' to go we are all set for a brand new year. A year in which we hope to see the Round Table Club and Motion Picture Herald still more firmly implanted throughout the entire industry. With an active membership of close to four thousand showmen we feel that we honestly have a majority representation already, but we won't be satisfied until we have increased the number to at least five thousand. That means one thousand additional members for nineteen thirty three.

Here' a chance for every Round Tabler to do his bit; let each member take it upon himself to enroll one new member. Just check up on all the showmen within your immediate vicinity and if you find one or two who are not members, clip the application from the Club pages and send it in with your own name signed on the bottom as proposer.

"In Unity There Is Strength," and the membership of the Round Table Club is rapidly becoming a formidable factor in the future of our business. You can never tell to what extent your membership may help you along the road; join now and let's all pull for a bigger and better showbusiness.

SOME BREEZY NOTES ABOUT CLEM POPE'S GANG IN CINCINNATI

News from the middle west division of RKO, supplied the Club through courtesy of Clem Pope, city manager in Cincinnati, indicates that the fellows out in his city have been busy.

As a means of plugging the RKO Thrift Book idea, Horace Wersel, assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre, took a little jaunt around town and convinced three Plymouth auto dealers it would be a great stunt to bestow one of the brand new models on the RKO patron who turned in the best "Ten Reasons Why I Should Buy an RKO Thrift Book."

The car was put on display at two or three theatres and trailers and billboards were extensively used to plug the idea. Over the week-end 10,000 cash customers helped themselves to entry blanks, which were available at all theatres but not handed out in the usual fashion. In other words, the scheme had merit enough to function on its own, thereby doing away with the usual litter generally following promiscuous distribution to passers-by in foyer, lobby or entrance. The thought behind the move was to familiarize the public with Thrift, rather than campaign for direct sales. Following preliminary effort a more direct campaign for sales will be instituted between agencies and theatre.

Great Combination!

Transferring attention to the Lyric Theatre, where Manager Bill Hastings and Artist Huff form a hard-to-beat combination when it comes to planning lobbies that not only stop patrons but make 'em dizzy with delight, we find two heads of Dressler and Moran that attracted plenty of attention on "Prosperity." We understand Huff is an air-brush wizard.

Hastings and Huff also constructed a miniature "Times Square" moving sign with the words "Prosperity Is Here" clipping along at the rate of about a mile per minute, or maybe twice as fast. The sidewalk was jammed with people who stopped to read the sign. We have Clem Pope's word for it that it had anything he'd ever seen in the way of "speed atmosphere" beat to a frazzle.

Hastings also made a tie-up with a local candy concern manufacturing the "Prosperity Candy Bar," whereby 5,000 window cards were placed and 300 special window displays secured. As Clem briefly sums up the situation, Cincinnati knew that "Prosperity" was in town—not around the corner.

Alexander's Displays!

Then, there's Joe Alexander, who operates the Family Theatre on a bi-weekly change but never fails to have a lobby display that makes 'em stop, look and listen. When he showed "Head Hunters of Paqua" it looked as if he'd moved the entire city museum into the theatre lobby—daggers, shields, spears and everything. On a recent Tom Mix picture he filled the place with revolvers of all sizes and shapes; on a previous Tom Mix, Joe had about 600 old Mix stills in the lobby, which patrons stood and gaped at until their eyes bulged. They did more than look, states Clem, as the box office testified.

Bill Dodds' Activities!

Across the street from Joe, Bill Dodds, manager of the Grand, plugged "Hells Highway" with stories about the sweat box tragedy in Florida and a replica of a torture chamber allegedly in use at prison camps. Whether the thought was entertaining or not it stopped the passers-by and packed the house.

Since Clem Pope started sending us a few words about the RKO crew out his way we've been able to get a line on what the fellows in Cincinnati have been doing and we hope he'll keep up the good work, even though we are fully aware that he has little time to spare from his own duties. However, his letters are particularly interesting and we'd sure hate to learn that this sturdy member of the Club had become inflicted with writer's cramp. More news of the Cincinnati front next time.

LASSMAN AND WILLS DOING A GOOD JOB FOR UTICA THEATRE

Despite a three to four day run schedule and consequent scarcity of time to fashion outstanding displays for all pictures, excellent work is being turned out from the work shop of the Avon Theatre, Utica, N. Y., by Manager Garry Lassman and Artist Will Wills.

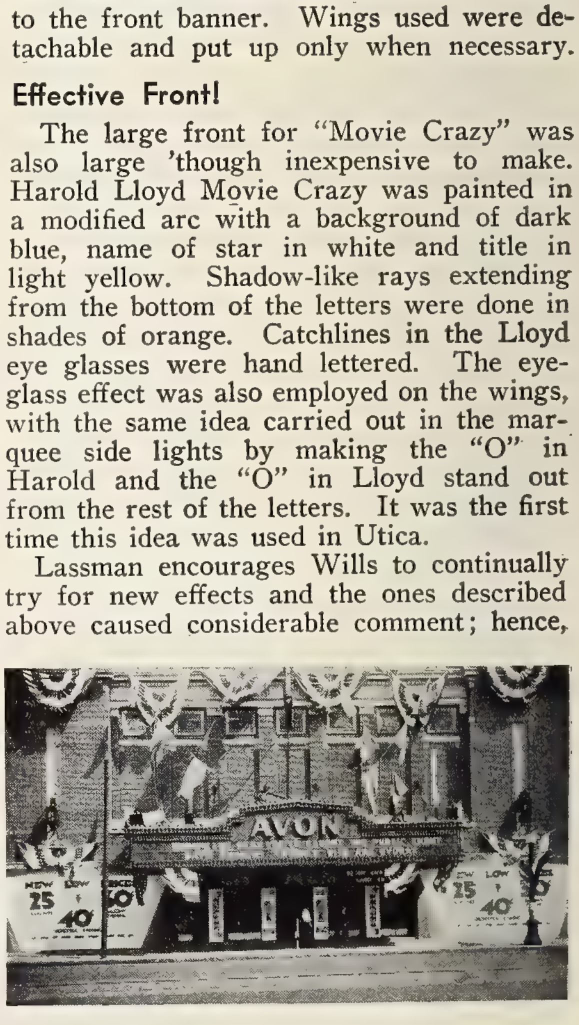
This time we are considerably handicapped in the matter of reproducing a number of photos sent along by Wills because the shots were taken at night time and signs and other lighting dominate the subjects; however, we can show one—a daytime photo of the Avon's gaily decorated front, panels and new price announcement boards at either side of entrance. The attractiveness of the artist's lettering is evident.

A front made for "Grand Hotel" was quite large (42 feet long) yet very economical. The overhead banner was used on the inside as a Coming Attraction sign and then the tacked on letters were moved to the front banner. Wings used were detachable and put up only when necessary.

Effective Front!

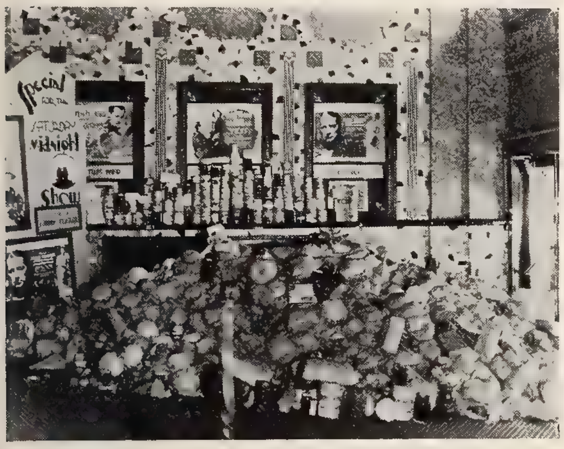
The large front for "Movie Crazy" was also large 'though inexpensive to make. Harold Lloyd Movie Crazy was painted in a modified arc with a background of dark blue, name of star in white and title in light yellow. Shadow-like rays extending from the bottom of the letters were done in shades of orange. Catchlines in the Lloyd eye glasses were hand lettered. The eyeglass effect was also employed on the wings, with the same idea carried out in the marquee side lights by making the "O" in Harold and the "O" in Lloyd stand out from the rest of the letters. It was the first time this idea was used in Utica.

Lassman encourages Wills to continually try for new effects and the ones described above caused considerable comment; hence, he's passing them along to his fellow Club members. We'll tell you more about his work in forthcoming issues. In the meantime Hello to Lassman, whom we haven't heard a whole lot from since he moved from Troy to Utica. How about this, Garry?



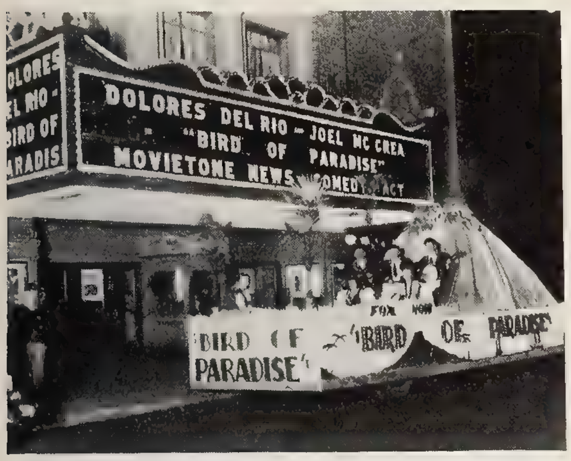
SOME PHOTOGRAPHIC EVIDENCE OF WHAT SIZER RECENTLY DID

The accompanying illustrations really tell the entire story of a couple of recent incidents in the career of Eaton M. Sizer, manager of the Fox Theatre, Appleton, Wis., but just to bolster up the cuts a bit and encourage the printing profession, we'll jot down a bit of superfluous copy.



Glancing at one it's altogether obvious that Eaton's S. O. S. for a Food Matinee received wide response from the good folk of Appleton. Through the Mayor a proclamation was made urging support of the relief program and the sympathetic parents of children supplied the latter with the pictured assortment of footstuffs to buy their admission to the show. And we don't mind telling you that it very much looks as though a lot of needy people were given a square meal or so. What do you say?

It seems almost trite to comment on the attractiveness of the "Bird of Paradise" float pictured in the other photo; you can see that for yourselves. Lest your eyes are growing dim and the reproduction be poor, however, we'll add that a sextette of musicians and singers featured this novel and effective bally made to represent the picture's theme and setting. Looks like Kate Smith sitting in the rear end.



Good work on the part of Manager Sizer and we'll hope to receive other photographic evidence of what's going on in showbusiness out his way. This is the first response we've had from him in a long, long time and it's gratifying to have him back on the active list again.

DeVellier Dead

William DeVellier, for some time associated with the A. H. Schwartz Century Circuit of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently passed away in a local hospital as the result of an operation. DeVellier was widely known in New York City and up-state theatre circles.

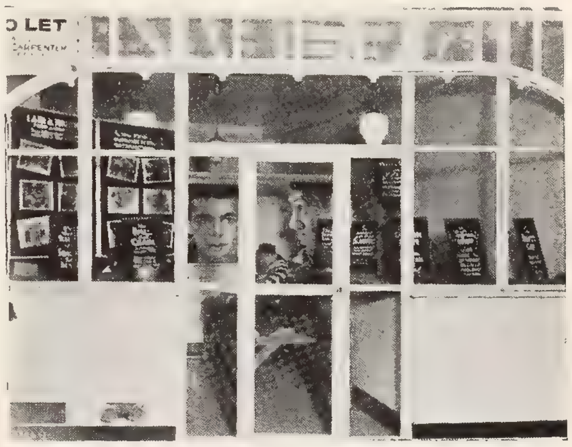
G. LABY EXPLOITED CHAIN GANG PICTURE WITH NOVEL DISPLAY

Display of chain gang camp implements and a caged, live prisoner in convict uniform effectively exploited "I Am a Fugitive" for G. Laby, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Boston, Mass.

One week in advance he built a display in the main lounge of the various items allegedly used in the daily life of a chain gang prisoner, including ball and chain, shackles, old cups and wash cans, whips and blankets. The display was further enhanced by many newspaper clippings concerning Burns, the fugitive, and a collection of stills from the picture. It went over so well inside the theatre that Laby promoted a window in an adjacent store for another display, such as shown in one of the accompanying photographs.

In addition to the implements and chain gang data the store housed the heavily screened-in cage for the "prisoners." This stunt attracted so much attention advance and currently that an attendant had to be posted in the store to see that the side-wall was not completely blocked off.



Granting that the film in question has real drawing power of its own, attention given the displays described above prompted Round Tabler Laby to pass the word along. He feels that the stunts helped him sell the picture and wants others to have this information. It's been some little time since we've heard from this Club member and we're mighty glad to have him back on the active list again.

SPECIAL NIGHT FOR STUDENTS ENDORSED BY FREDERICK HINDS

In line with a recently published Club editorial on the subject of special admission prices for adolescents, Fred Hinds, owner-manager of the Strand Theatre, Whitewater, Wis., advises this department that his experience along these lines has proven most profitable to the box office.

Whitewater only boasts a population of about 3,500, but includes a state teachers' college with an enrollment of 700 and two high schools with about 350 students. The college enrollment is in addition to regular population and, naturally, furnishes a large percentage of theatre business in normal times.

About a year ago a check-up revealed that student trade had dropped to 35 per cent, a condition which made a big splash of red on the books. So Hinds called upon the college president and heads of the two high schools and obtained permission to place a card advertising "Student Night" on all bulletin boards, which students are required to read twice daily, announcing a special admission of 15 cents.

On the first advertised "Student Night" one-half of the college enrollment and a somewhat smaller percentage of students from the high schools attended the show. Since then this unusually large attendance has proportionally fallen, but, to an extent where former revenue is still three times greater.

The psychology of the scheme appears to lie in the fact that students, while not interested in attending a theatre when every night is open, will come when a night is set aside for them. Hinds tells us that he was strongly advised by a number of showmen not to make such a move, for fear of adverse reaction from adult patrons. At the time he, too, shared that fear but results proved to the contrary. While Student Nights were not advertised to the public it was but natural that others than scholars should become aware that a special night was being held. What Hinds' advisers failed to take into consideration was that every home in Whitewater, in some way closely identified with all schools, such as acting as boarding house, etc., became beneficiaries to the scheme. Whitewater has no dormitories. Ninety per cent of Whitewater homes have a son, daughter, niece, nephew, cousin or some relative in the college or schools, and a benefit to any of the scholars is likewise a benefit to the adults.

Hinds is in a position to accurately check revenue from adolescent patronage because his cashier is the High School superintendent's secretary during the day and his doorman a popular college athlete. So after a year's experimentation he recommends the scheme to any showman who is located in a town that has a school large enough to draw upon. This does not necessarily mean a college town. The same idea might be applied to any student body.

Fred Hinds is a new contributor to the Round Table Club and we're mighty glad to broadcast this seasoned showman's ideas. He's been in the game for quite some time and knows his way 'round. We'll be on the lookout for further news of what's going on in showbusiness out his way.

TAYLOR, BERMAN AND BREARTON PUT OVER A STRONG CAMPAIGN

A most effective tie-up was recently engineered on "Prosperity" by Messrs. Taylor, Berman and Brearton of Shea's Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., through cooperation of the Sears-Roebuck store, a chain restaurant concern and a local dealer in popular priced autos.

The Sears store used several hundred assorted "Prosperity" banners in all departments and give-aways were made of "Prosperity Bonds" and guest tickets. The 60 restaurants in the chain all carried tie-in cards and "Prosperity Specials" on menus and the auto dealer arranged a parade of cars through the principal streets of the city and suburbs. A ballyhoo truck carrying a 24-sheet on either side, a 6-sheet in the rear and two 3's on the front, also did effective work in the busy section of the city during noon and early evening hours. On another night the special broadcast by Marie Dressler over the Fleischman hour was delivered through a large Philco at the front of the theatre.

Seems as though we can detect the fine hand of Charles Taylor in the above tie-ups and wonder if it's the same Taylor we knew in the "old days." If so—howdy, "Frank Elliott," and we know he'll know what that's all about. At any rate, credit to all concerned and here's hoping to hear some more news concerning show-selling efforts put forth by the crew at Shea's Buffalo.

MURRAY ALPER PUT OVER AN EFFECTIVE THREE-WAY TIE-UP

It's been some time since we've been able to report on the activities of Murray Alper, manager of the Commodore Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., but recent advice bears out that he's still carrying on at the same old stand.

One of his recent show-selling stunts consisted of working out a three-way tie-up for "Life Begins," which is illustrated in the accompanying photo. All the props shows were promoted from a maternity hospital, a surgical appliance company and a concern that handled supplies for babies. A wax figure of a woman and baby were placed in the bed and an incubator and other maternity ward accessories, such as identification beads, etc., were on display. Two nurses, furnished by the hospital, were in attendance at all times.

When he played "Horsefeathers" a three-sheet of the Marx Brothers was placed in a shadow box in the foyer, with a "peanut background" and copy reading, "We're Nuts to You." Letters were cut from beaverboard. This material was further utilized currently by placing same on two peanut vending stands nearby the theatre.

LIFE BEGINS

Okay, Murray, and let's hear more often from you in the weeks to come. You and the other fellows on the Randforce circuits have been doing some effective work, according to reports, and we want to pass word of your activities along the line.

STUDY LOCAL SALES ANGLES OF EACH PICTURE; THEN GO AHEAD

Determine What Selling Points Are Best for Your Own Campaign; What New Slants to Give it to Command Appeal

Avoid Campaign Duplication And Hackneyed Stunts; Digest These Effective Slants From a Practical Showman

Harry C. Browne, author of the accompanying article and manager of the Fox-Stanford Theatre, Palo Alto, Calif., is a practical showman of many years experience. He never advertises or exploits a picture without thoroughly digesting its possibilities for local adaptation. He plans his work, as all of us should do, then works his plan. We believe the accompanying paragraphs offer many fine and practical ideas on localized selling, from the mind of a theatre man who has made a close study of the points outlined on this page.

by Harry C. Browne

ALMOST every picture produced has some sales angle, which, if given the proper thought, will present some definite punch to bring home to your public. Read your synopsis if you have no opportunity to see the picture in advance. Digest the story and its high lights, study the cast, and fit each character into the story. Pick the outstanding thing in that picture, whether it be theme, story, author, cast, or characterization, and go to work.

What angle will appeal to your own situation and to your patrons the most. What new form can you put this campaign into, so that it will not be hackneyed and time worn? Get the minds of your organization at work. I have received some great ideas from some of my ushers. Don't overlook anyone's thoughts in the matter of exploitation. One man cannot conceive and execute alone, without getting into a sameness of effort.

Lobbies and Windows

Lobbies and windows are as good as twenty-four sheets if properly executed. If you can animate these displays, they have three times the value of a silent display. You can do wonders with a small motor and a few belts attached to movable displays. If it is only a cut-out of Joe E. Brown opening and closing his mouth, you have an ad that will stop prospective ticket buyers, and create a laugh at the moving caricature of that popular player, what he is playing in and where he is playing. If you can add atmospheric backgrounds and foregrounds, you immediately supply the theme of the picture and its story, enough to intrigue the ticket buyers.

Even though you have no art department, you can resort to three sheets, six sheets, twenty-four sheets and other means for attractive cutouts. Plain silver, gold or other colored flitter will give you a screaming background, which will attract in daylight or under lights. A few yards of black oil cloth with block silver flitter letters will give you a marquee valance of attractive brilliance. You can block these letters in with a ruler so that they will all be uniform, cover the markings with glue and sprinkle the flitter on. When dry it is ready to hang. I have found that these oil cloth banners can be soaked, the flitter removed and ground up and used again and again. The cost is negative when used in this manner.

Animation Effective

Animation in lobbies and windows is even more effective in attraction and sales value. You will need the help of a man with a mechanical mind. In almost every town there is some mechanical genius who is always ready for experiments and who will readily work with you in the conception of attractive displays. I am very fortunate in having Ray Hardy, our maintenance man, who is a genius at moving displays. It is true we do not use them too often. We save them for big punches, and in so doing they mean more to us than when used repeatedly. A small motor, different sized gear wheels and arms and belts to run off the wheels are the equipment needed for this type of display.

Copy for imprint on your displays must not be the "SAME OLD STORY" with the same old adjectives and the same old phrases. Fit your copy to your ideas on the punch of the picture you are selling. I am afraid that the selling copy in all advertising, whether it be newspaper, program or display, is getting too much in the repetitive strain. We must radically change the tune for old tunes are becoming too familiar and the public know all the phrases by heart. We are selling merchandise, no matter how intangible it may be, and we must serve appetizers before the regular fare comes on. How hungry the public will be for the big meal, depends on the appetizers you offer. Therefore you must "PLAN YOUR WORK, AND WORK TO THAT PLAN," and the results will show.

Variety!

When a certain type of display wears out, have another type of work ready to replace it. At the present time we are planning to go into papier-mache work, using heads and figures, and depicting actual punch scenes from the picture, taken from stills. When we get this ready and perfected, doing all our own work, we will have an entirely new method of selling, in our territory. With art backgrounds and the actual reproductions of the characters in the picture we can stop any one and also offer a merchant a great and attractive tieup for his best windows.

The foregoing sales medium puts punch in your lobbies and your merchants' windows; it attracts the eyes, and if intriguing enough will whet the appetite of the public. But you must keep your thoughts also on your newspaper advertising, and the many other angles of advertising and exploitation which your situation calls for. Work with your various clubs and civic organizations in your community. Talk to your service clubs on the making of talking pictures, on sound, on the making of cartoons, on the reaction of the public to stars and to their screen vehicles. After a talk to a service club, I generally call for questions, regarding our business or the making of pictures. This has been a big asset to our theatre, and we have received lots of publicity and loads of good will from this one angle alone.

Watch Sex Angles!

Be careful of the SEX angle, especially in the smaller communities. It does not sell in my town, and has always seemed to be detrimental to the success of a picture. I think that we offend more with the sex angle than we attract. We can sell more tickets with George Arliss, Marie Dressler, Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, than with all the sexy pictures combined. In the home loving communities, there is no question, they want their entertainment clean and wholesome, with comedy, thrills, romance and a few sobs. Those pictures spell BOX OFFICE SUCCESS, and they will never die. They make your theatre popular.

"The American Family"

They bring you family trade, for there is no offense to the children or Grandma or to Mother and Dad. And after all, it is the American Family that we are catering to, and to whom we are industriously trying to sell our entertainment. Keep your house service up, keep your public contact employees on their toes, do not let your service lag, resell every patron, struggle to have your patrons believe in you and have faith in you, so that they will respond to the things you say to them on your screen and in your newspapers, and in your displays. Play fair with your merchants, so that you can always go back for more co-operation. Consider it a part of your life to keep civilly active. Be a fast moving integral part of your community and you cannot fail.

A great part of our successful work on displays lies in our organization. Kenneth Miller, our artist, is still on the job.

Think of all the nice things you would want people to do if you were coming to a theatre steadily; put yourself in the place of the public, and act accordingly, and you will get the best out of your situation.

Madden Still At It!

A copy of a Norfolk, Va., newspaper discloses that J. J. Madden, manager of the Granby Theatre there, is still able to get away with free space, according to a recently published display ad eleven inches deep on three columns. Good work, J. J., and more power to you!

WE OFTEN WONDER!

IF IT WILL COME TO THIS

Now that repeal of the 18th Amendment appears to be in the offing, maybe it will come to this!

SOLOMON FOUND AIR AND SOUND DEVICE GOOD SALES ANGLES

While newspapers and other advertising and publicity mediums functioned in the usual, effective manner, perhaps the outstanding means used by S. S. Solomon, city manager for Publix in Youngstown, Ohio, to place "Big Broadcast" before the public, were radio announcements and a loudspeaking monitor device hooked up on the marquee.

Guessing identity of singers' voices broadcast over the air via records and an Imitator Contest featured the activities at a local radio station and both are credited with a goodly share of glory in the final check-up. The station presented twelve 5-minute periods with introductory announcements asking listeners-in to name the radio star, time the announcement went on air, etc., and then ran off one of the records. Hundreds of replies were received and the deserving names were broadcast over the regular "Paramount Chatterbox" period the following Wednesday. The other stunt invited listeners-in to come to the station and give auditions in imitation of Kate Smith, Bing Crosby or the Mills Brothers. The best of the lot were chosen for appearance on a special program and were named guests of the Paramount Theatre.

The newspaper campaign, in addition to five advance ads, included three extra cooperative stories tying in the radio station stunts; two feature stories in each paper because of preview election night show; six write-ups in each paper; two 2-column and five 1-column cuts and regular current ads. At the election night preview much interest among the audience was centered on the electrically rigged Donkey and Elephant placed at one side of stage, alternately blinking electric eyes as returns came in.

Obtaining an extra monitor from another local theatre outstanding music from the picture was transmitted from the monitor in the booth to one rigged on the marquee, using two lines from booth monitor with storage battery and a switch control in the manager's office. As stated above, this stunt didn't cost a farthing and was most effective.

Additional effort included extensive sniping of "Radio Stars Magazine," placing of one hundred 22x28's advance and currently in window tie-ups; attraction letters on marquee one week prior, as well as six-sheet board on barricade; two 6-sheets on side of building; grocery store and market tie-up for distribution of circulars; mention of picture over Time Service; special feature story in Italian-American newspaper; special front and art work in lobby; distribution of 350,000 slips through tie-up made with large chain store concern; 'phone calls to suburban families first two days, and the usual trailer advertising.

Proved His Point!

Despite exceptionally strong opposition Solomon and his crew came through with high honors by virtue of the campaign outlined above and, as stated in the opening paragraph, proved to their satisfaction that the air and other media akin to theme of the picture were stronger and more appropriate methods of enlisting public interest. More from this energetic showman at a future date.

STILL TIME ENOUGH TO STAGE BENEFIT SUCH AS KOPPLIN'S

Although the popular season for giving relief and remembrances are past for 1932 our best informed experts on economics advise that tough times are still with us and that a whole lot of folk are in dire need; hence, we're passing along a few words about the Relief Festival recently engineered by Harold Kopplin, of Wometco Theatres, Miami, Fla.

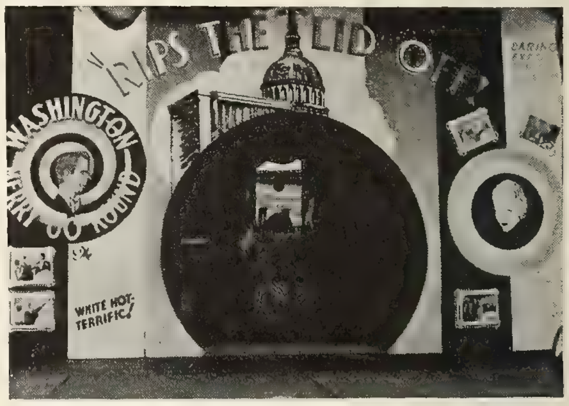
For seven days four of the Wolfson-Meyer houses—the Capitol, Grove, Biltmore and Tower—admitted two persons for one admission plus some article of food for the needy. Salvation Army attendants were on hand to accept the articles and it only takes a few glances at a number of newspaper tear sheets to become entirely convinced that the event was an unqualified success. The committee in charge consisted of Messrs. Meyer and Wolfson, Captain Stephan, Harold Kopplin, Jack Fink, Howard Morris, Nelson Tower, John M. Shepherd and Edgar Pearce.

We're right along with Kopplin when he states that the above is a corking method of creating additional good will for any theatre and, at the same time, a consequent booster of box office receipts. Conditions certainly lend to any movements for relief and we've had the pleasure of recording a great deal of work along these lines by many of our Club members, which, we sincerely believe, will not do them or their theatres one bit of harm. As far as we can see newspaper publicity alone is worth the effort, to say nothing of the finest sort of good will advertising.

ANIMATED DISPLAY HARRINGTON USED WAS EFFECTIVE AID

With all respect due H. D. Harrington, assistant manager of the Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., for his proficiency with a kodak, we don't believe for one moment that the accompanying photo of a front he made for "Washington Merry-Go-Round" does anywhere near full justice to the subject.

The photo represents the entrance to the theatre, with circular portion cut from compo-board. The circle behind Lee Tracy's head was animated so that when it turned it produced a peculiar, mystifying appearance of lines coming and going from nowhere. The entire front was painted red, white and blue and topped off with bunting of the same colors. Harrington also had a record made up and projected the sound through the moving disc.



Newspaper Aid

Plenty of enthusiasm was built up for the picture through a unique newspaper advertising campaign and when the patrons came down-town they were all set to go for the show in a big way. With the picture showing in a 500 seat house in a town of 30,000 population, where there's plenty of competition, Harrington and T. W. Lewis deserve plenty of credit for turning in such a profitable three-day run. A good sound display and newspaper advertising did the trick, advises Harrington. We'll tell you more about what these two showmen are doing in future issues.

ORGANIST GOOKIN DOUBLES AS STAGE MANAGER AND P. A.

Canned music may have cost a lot of organists their jobs but it turned one console manipulator into a stage manager and associate publicity man, in addition to doing regular duty at the pipes. We refer to G. A. Gookin, one of the staff at the Majestic Theatre, Johnson City, Tenn., who recently contributed a brief account of what has been going on of late in showbusiness down his way.

MOVIE CRAZY?

When "Movie Crazy" came to town Gookin left his organ long enough to devise a dummy motion picture camera, which he mounted on the back of the rumble seat of a coupe. He then sallied forth among the credulous Johnson Citians and proceeded to "shoot" them. "Curiosity, vanity and eagerness to get in front of a movie camera is all in favor of the ballyhoo crew," advises Gookin. A great gag if you can get away with it, say we!

Enlisting of local and adjacent town vaudeville talent is another one of G. A.'s features. He runs these shows on Saturday nights and 'though operating over a period of ten months few repeats have been necessary. Consistent billing of city neighborhoods and neighboring towns recruit new talent as needed, which he rehearses and coaches to meet requirements of the management. A Master of Ceremonies officiates each vaudeville night and with an organ accompaniment to all acts the presentation goes over in a big way. Awards from $5 down to guest tickets are made to the contestants.

We believe this is the first time we've had the pleasure of getting a line on what one of the fellows with Johnson City Enterprises is doing to earn his daily bread and hope it's just a forerunner of what's to come from both Gookin and others with that concern. Shoot your ideas along, fellows.

HELP WANTED!

At the request of a number of Club members we are addressing an urgent appeal to Round Tablers so situated that they are limited to use of weekly or bi-weekly newspaper advertising to send in examples of their layouts, so that we can complete an assortment for presentation in full page form.

In the meantime, we ask those who have from time to time requested this information to be patient for a short time. We promise it won't be long now.

CLASSIFIED TIE-UP GAVE DICK WRIGHT LOT OF FREE SPACE

A tie-up made with classified department of a newspaper during the pre-Xmas season netted considerable free space for Dick Wright, manager of the Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

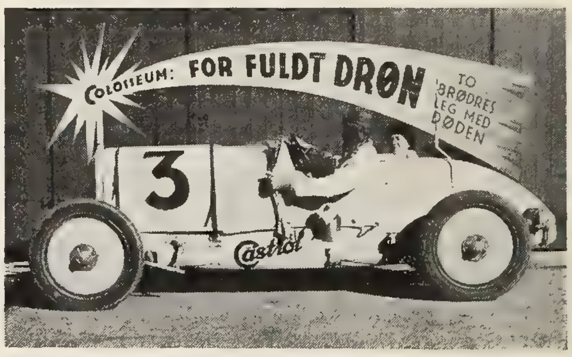
Each day the paper published a jingle on the classified page, such as: "If Mother's Wish Is for a Lamp—If Baby Wants a Doll—If Father Often Speaks of Ties." . . . The last word of the fourth line of each jingle was concealed among the Xmas Gift ads, each letter in parentheses, and the idea was to make it complete and send same in to the department. The gag netted Dick 25 inches of free display ad space each week.

Another stunt that went over well for "You Said a Mouthful" was having two girls in sailor costumes distribute 6,000 samples of locally manufactured pretzels in sealed glassine bags on day of pre-view. The writer just had a "mouthful" of a sample and doesn't doubt for one moment that the tasty little crackers went over in a big way. Postal Telegraph boys also aided with distribution.

Classified ad page tie-ups have proven popular with many Club members and a variety of gags have been used to gain readers' attention. Wright's jingle idea was a good one, it seems to us. His "Mouthful" stunt also sounds particularly adaptable and one doesn't have to live next door to a pretzel house to work out something similar; lots of other things that people like to munch.

OLSEN USED MOTOR BALLY TO EXPLOIT FILM IN DENMARK

It may be somewhat late to report on exploitation for "Crowd Roars" in this country, but over in Copenhagen, where John Olsen manages the Warner branch, the film is not quite so antique.



Pictured here is the racing car that Olsen had driven through the streets for six hours every day for six days preceding opening of picture. Atop the car was a comet-shaped sign with title of picture, name of theatre and playdate lettered in Danish.

Additional effort included distribution of 5,000 teasers in English in convenient spots on premises where the British exhibition was being held. These were also handed out to the crews of the English warships stationed there at that time. The picture enjoyed a profitable run of eleven days at the Coliseum Theatre.

The Club is always glad to receive news from foreign shores and we'll look forward to hearing more about what Olsen is doing to plug Warner product in his territory.

Yovim's Special Herald

In an effort to round up trade from Xmas shoppers and children, J. A. Yovim, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Tacony, Philadelphia, Pa., issued a one-sheet size cardboard herald which read: "Send the Kids to the Movies While You Do Your Xmas Shopping—and—Don't Forget the Movies Are Good for You and That Tired Feeling After Shopping—Come On and Relax" (Theatre and Address). Printing was done in green and red on white background.

Club Index for Month of December

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of December. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

ANSWERING SMALL TOWN THEATRE OPERATION FROM THE FIRING LINE

Tom and Mrs. Connie Edwards Offer Variety of Selling Ideas For the Exhibitor Who Operates in Smaller Communities

Their Ideas Must Be Practical Because Their Theatre Clicks Along at a Pleasing Pace Despite Cry of Tough Times!

WE'RE always glad to hear from Tom Edwards, who, with his wife, Mrs. Connie Edwards, operates the Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo.; for his letters, even though far apart, appear to carry the answer to smalltown theatre operation. Maybe it's Mrs. Edwards who is the guiding genius; maybe it's Tom's wide experience as an erstwhile film salesman (he may still be doubling as one). Anyway, the Ozark clicks along at a merry rate despite the universal cry of hard times—mainly because Tom and Connie are forever giving it a cheerful little push.

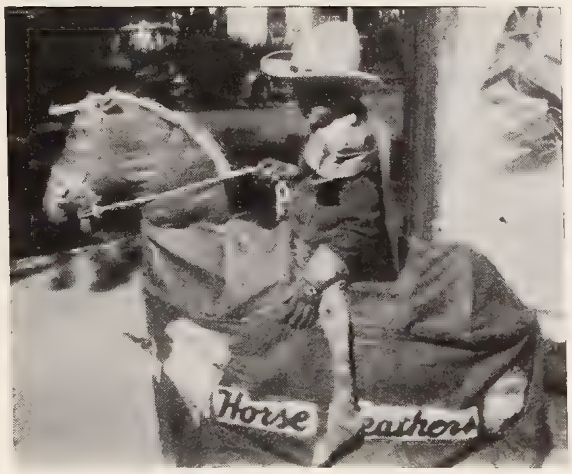
To begin with they go after kiddie patronage and good will in a whole-hearted way; not so much on account of actual cash returns, for we all know that isn't so much, but for the vast amount of good children can accomplish in many ways for a theatre. Various clubs have been organized to meet at Saturday matinees, the last one called Tom's Club and used to plug serials. For instance, he gave every kid in town a chance to see the first chapter for one cent and with the incidental adult trade did within two dollars of business accounted for the previous Saturday.

Sliding Scale!

Tom told the youngsters that the next episode would cost them two cents; the third, three cents, etc., on up to the tenth, which would rate the usual 10 cents, providing they didn't miss any of the chapters. If that happened, their cards were voided. He caught more kiddie patronage than ever before and, incidentally, more adult trade at 25 cents per copy. He plays a Western at the matinee and then spots it again after the regular nine o'clock show Saturday night, advertising "Come at 9; Stay Till 12; See Two Shows for the Price of One." So he gets most of the kids back again for the first show Saturday night; and do the farmers like the idea of two shows for the price of one! It's kept Saturday business 'way up. According to an announcement he made, the next time a serial is started 500 pennies are to be thrown from the top of the marquee, just to make sure that most every kid will have a penny for the first show. He tried a similar gag one time on the grown-ups by throwing live chickens off the marquee and the stunt more than stopped traffic.

A Trick Horse!

When looking through an issue of "Child Life," Tom came across instructions on how to build a trick horse and adapted the idea to "Horsefeathers." A P. S. in his letter informs us that he sent the plans along, but we'll be darned if we can find same. Anyway, he took the heads and title off the regular one-sheet to further carry out the scheme. Credit for constructing the horse goes to Tom's operator, who is also a good carpenter. Credit for all excitement in the theatre when the horse first made its appearance goes to Tom's nine-year-old son, who rode the gadget across the stage and put it through all kinds of trick dancing, falls, bucking, trotting and whatnot. It was a riot, according to reports. Any further information on this gag will have to come from Tom himself, as all we have at hand is a small snapshot too faint to reproduce.



Here is a tried and proven attention gag wherein the youngster hangs the horse over his shoulders in suspender fashion and propels himself with his own feet. The impression remains that he is really sitting on the dummy horse.

The Edwardes also held their Annual Bathing Beauty show this season with even greater success than last. Maybe the rest of you will recall that each year the Edwardses sponsor the selection of "Miss Lake of the Ozarks." Mrs. Connie has charge of this stunt and we're here to let you know that she does a bang-up job. Goes out and sells the merchants, promotes cooperative advertising, stages the entire show, etc. As the year previous, K. C. and St. Louis papers picked up the photos for their roto pages. A Fashion Show was also pulled off this year, but Tom foregoes sending details, stating that it was conducted much the same as similar shows outlined in Club pages from time to time. He strongly recommends such a show for a general trade reviver.

Effective Calendar!

Now we come to the Edwards monthly calendar, which is just a bit different than the regular run of these popular show advertising mediums. About 4,000 of these are issued each month and have been so well received that people phone in and register a kick if they don't get them. Ten people are called each day until 10 correctly name the picture showing at the theatre on that day. Every single pass thus far given out has brought in an extra admission to the house. Some folks have told Tom that they keep the calendar right above the phone and never fail to look at it before lifting the receiver. Dates on the card are well spaced and permit room for the original catchlines Tom makes up.

On that same calendar Edwards announced another one of his gags which, he states, is going great guns. Copy read: "When I was young my mother dropped me on my head and that is the only excuse I can give for selling $1 bills for 40c. Don't miss Tom's 'Tom Foolery' Auction Sales on Wednesday and Thursday and buy 50 cents worth of sugar for 16 cents.—Tom." Or, "Don't Miss Tom's Auction Sale, when he will give you $5 if he doesn't lose 50 cents on any article of staple groceries. $1 Bills as Low as 40 cents."

He generally starts off his Sale by auctioneering off a $1 bill, usually receiving about 75 cents for it. Then he auctions off the 75 cents for about 40 cents, and so on until the dollar has completely disappeared. Then he starts on groceries and advertises that articles will not be sold for over half what they are actually worth. Everything is a Bargain, bought from local stores at a substantial reduction, although Tom thinks the merchandise might be promoted. When the merchandise, etc., is presented to the patron, either Tom or the doorman takes the article down to the winner in order not to embarrass him by forcing appearance on the stage.

Stilling Using Cards!

Yes, he's still using birthday cards for the school children and thinks it's an excellent gag for any town. You know what he means—a tickler file full of names and birth dates, so a pass can be mailed as a reminder of the extraordinary occurrence.

A post card size multistamp has also been found a great help when in a hurry to get out some special message at the last moment. For instance, he had a circus against him one Saturday night and at first decided to take it on the chin. About 30 minutes before show time that night he determined to fight it out, got out his multistamp and made up some cards announcing a special show at 10:45 P. M., directly after close of the circus. Then he went to the showgrounds, secured permission from those in charge to pass out the circulars as the people went in and, consequently, picked up about $25 more than he received the previous Saturday night. Imagine his embarrassment. He also uses that stamp to date all heralds and for imprinting backs of exchange heralds and other small pamphlets.

Popular Humor!

In line with the popular brand of bathroom humor, such as presented in publications such as "Ballyhoo" for the edification of a considerable number of Americans these days, Tom advises us, just as he went to press with his letter, that Eldon, Mo., and Times Square are not so far apart on belly laughs, judging from the response he received from getting out a toilet paper herald-for-men-only on "Movie Crazie," whereon was inscribed "Wipe that frown off your face—laugh with Harold Lloyd," etc. Distribution of 250 regulation diapers

GOODMAN SENDS US THEATRE NEWS FROM FAR EASTERN CITIES

From Manila, P. I., a short time ago came an envelope containing data on a few goings-on in show business in the Far East, including China, Straits Settlements and India. A return address up in the left hand corner—D. Goodman, Manila, P. O. Box 423—no more no less, is the only clue we have of the sender. Okay for that! Now let's see what some of our foreign brothers have been up to:

Note the reproduction of a full page on "Congorilla." It is part of a special section published by Movie Weekly, a Chinese paper with a subscription circulation of 7,000 and street sale of 3,000 copies. One copy was mailed to every theatre in China by presumably the Fox Theatre interests over there. Three thousand were printed one side only and sniped all over Shanghai. Translate the copy yourselves, it's too much for us!

Small Figures!

The other photo showing what appears to be a 24-sheet posted on a dilapidated shack in Shanghai is interesting in that it portrays the Chinese or Japanese idea of proportions of figures representing the hero and heroine in the right hand end of poster. Note the diminutiveness of the figures, which more or less corresponds to the small stature of local inhabitants. As above, we'll leave it to our readers to interpret the balance of the 24-sheet.

On to Bombay!

Continuing our sight-seeing trip in the Orient we'll make a stop in Bombay where the "Times of India" informs us that Mr. Rustomji Dorabji, proprietor of Wellington Talkies, is the operator of the city's newest and largest cinema. An "Exclusive Premiere" was a feature of its opening. Local newspapers gave the event plenty of publicity.

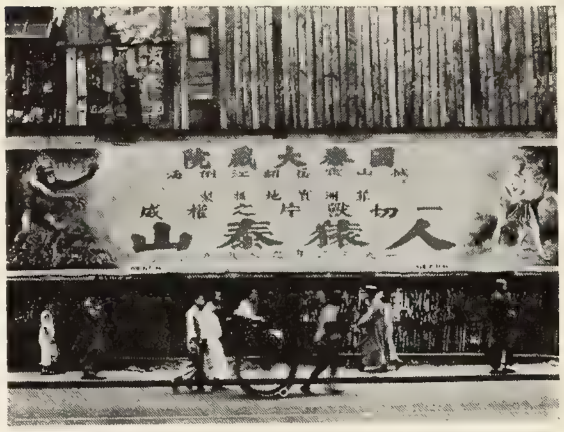
Going over the Straits Settlements and picking up a copy of the "Straits Times," we get a good idea of space taken to advertise week-end shows. A full page was given to a variety of entertainment, with "Congorilla" the centre of attraction.

Here Is the Oriental Idea of How a Twenty-Four Sheet Should Look!



As we progress it becomes more and more evident that Contributor Goodman must have had something to do with the effective advertising campaign made in the Far East on "Congorilla"; if we are wrong, maybe he'll set us right when next we hear from his neck of the world. News from correspondents in foreign lands is always interesting and we will look forward to hearing from Goodman again.

ANOTHER GAG FROM VERSATILE GOOKIN DOWN IN TENNESSEE

Here we are again with the latest show news from Johnson City, Tenn., where the versatile George A. Gookin, organist, musical director, associate publicity manager and manager of attractions for the Majestic Theatre, regularly treats the town to a variety of thrills when exploiting some picture.

With the opening of "Air Mail" in mind the resourceful George hied himself around to his newspaper friends and sold them the idea of running a story to effect that "A Message From the Sky" would appear at noon time on playdate. He wrote the copy himself.

To make a long story short the papers came through with columns of free space and stiff necks were the fashion among a majority of the pedestrians and other lookers when an airplane appeared over the town. The pilot didn't write a message in the sky but zoomed over town in the act of dropping 5,000 inexpensive throw-aways, among which were fifty special circulars. Believe it or not, advises Gookin, twenty of these were found and returned to the box office, despite a brisk wind which carried the paper on building tops and out-of-the-way places. The entire cost came to $5 for the plane hop and $7.50 for throwaways.

An old gag, admits the energetic George, but it worked like a charm and materially aided box office receipts. Maybe the advance interest he created through newspaper publicity was responsible for the large amount of interest in the stunt. At any rate, more power to our Club member down in Johnson City, and we'll be looking for further word on his show-selling activities.

Brenon On His Own

Herbert Brenon, Jr., formerly in charge of a house at Fort Smith, Ark., has leased the Playhouse Theatre at Fairhope, Ala.

DELIS ENGINEERED BIG CAMPAIGN FOR PALACE REOPENING

Newspaper, radio and a variety of advertising and exploitation activities featured the campaign made on "Grand Re-Opening of the Million Dollar Palace Theatre, Canton, Ohio, by Manager George Delis."

Advance action included careful distribution of fifteen 24-sheets, two hundred 2-sheets, 100 one-half sheet cards and the posting of one hundred special window cards in all parts of the town and outskirts within a radius of thirty miles. A front page story was secured in the local newspaper, as well as out-of-town papers, concerning the reopening and attraction. Newspaper advertising was also used in local and out-of-town papers 10 days in advance. The radio made announcements four times daily over a ten-day advance period.

Additional efforts included placing of pieces of linoleum on sidewalks with copy: "Step On It—Attend the Grand Reopening of the Palace Theatre, Etc."; promotion of a large cooperative ad; use of tire cover advertisements; special front on theatre; special displays in stores; two striking 24-sheet cutouts on top of marquee at either side; display of telegrams from RKO stars; miniature cards; special banners; signs on street cars and buses; distribution of 5,000 telegrams via Western Union messengers; inserts; display pennants and special circulars.

We have one of the special house-to-house cards before us, enclosed in envelope and reading: "Howdy Folks!—Here's a Hot Tip For You!—How to Save Gas, Coal and Electricity—Confidential Information and Instructions inside!" The enclosed card told them all to "Shut Off the Furnace! Turn Out the Light! Turn Off the Gas!—And Take the Whole Family to See the Show You've Been Waiting For at the Palace Theatre."

Delis also had the cashiers 'phone homes three days in advance, arranged for an attractive floral display in the lobby and used a number of other regular advertising stunts.

Certainly, all the action outlined above ought to have gotten Delis off to a good start with his new venture in the interests of A. G. Constant, general manager of the Palace and other theatres out Canton way. We'll hope to tell you all more about what's going on there in future issues and, in the meantime, will sign off with sincere wishes for success.

SMALL TOWN OPERATION

on the occasion of "Blessed Event" was another gag that made them chuckle. He also had a line in the lobby with all sorts of other baby accessories hanging therefrom. Tom works on the reliable old theory that if you can start them gabbing you'll do business, which is undoubtedly a pretty good rule to follow.

Tom says that's all from the Edwardes this time and we are forced to echo his statement. He has given managers situated as he is the lowdown on what it takes to build small town patronage. How about some of the rest of the gang coming through with an exchange of information we can pass back to Edwards?

SORIERO HELPED BOOST STATE PRODUCT

The novel idea of mailing a letter typed on a very thin sheet of rolled copper was recently put into effect from the Tucson, Arizona, office of Fox West Coast Theatres by District Manager Thomas D. Soriero in conjunction with a state-wide move to boost the copper industry with newspaper and radio publicity and exhibits at theatres, etc.

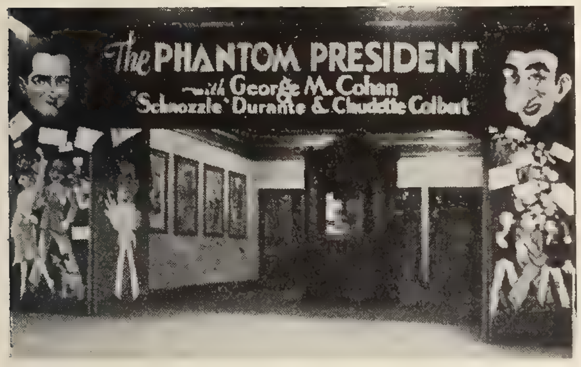
Placing a piece of copper right before the reader's eye, plus the fact that the metal could be rolled thinly enough to use in a typewriter, was certainly a corking way to get across a message and reflects originality and showmanship from Soriero.

ELLIS BRODIE WAGED EFFECTIVE CAMPAIGN ON CURRENT PICTURE

An old fashioned torchlight parade, novelty advertising in the form of telegrams, tabs, gag cards and elaborate lobby and front displays and other effective exploitation, featured the campaign made on "Phantom President" by Ellis Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Haverhill, Mass.

Used Telegram Gag!

Telegrams, supposed to have been sent by George M. Cohan, were received and read at Kiwanis, American Legion and Country Club meetings, as outlined in the exploitation manual. The gist of the messages was that he (Cohan) was running on the laugh ticket and that other candidates were taking the campaign too seriously.



The 5,000 tabloids, secured gratis from the advertising department of a Boston newspaper, were distributed to patrons as they left the theatre one week prior to opening. These were folded small as possible so that patrons would put them in their pockets instead of discarding them in or near the theatre entrance. A remarkably small number were found outside, proving that in a majority of cases the tabs were taken home and read.

Good Advance Campaign!

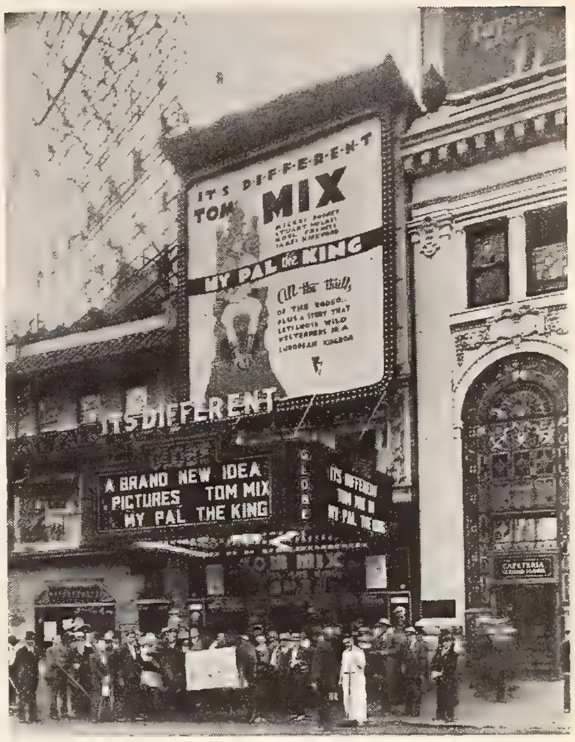
A few days in advance of the torchlight parade, which was staged the night before opening, the front page of the local paper was used to insert notices that a big political parade and rally was due on Friday night. In addition, a sound truck was appropriately bannered and records were played over its route between 5 and 7 o'clock. At 7.15 P. M. the parade formed in front of the theatre and with the sound truck in the van, started its line of march. Five autos owned by theatre employees followed with red and green flares. Behind the autos came about 50 young fellows, with 20 of them bearing banners on which were slogans such as: "Two Dimes For every Nickel," etc. Small political cards were distributed, the public address system broadcast the "Schnozzle" comedy campaign speech and about a gross of flares were burned.

One thousand "Schnozzle" novelty cards, with the movable chain nose, were distributed among schools and business establishments and proved a corking word-of-mouth advertising gag, because everyone showed the trick to someone else.

The small photo will convey a good idea of the grotesque looking front and foyer display used one week in advance. A very elaborate false front was constructed, done in a variety of colors and carrying out the parade idea with slogans, banners, etc. Cutouts of Durante and Cohan were placed at either end.

It seems like old times again to digest one of Ellis Brodie's campaigns and we're mighty glad to again see his name among the articles in this department. This is the season for him to come through with a lot of good show-selling tips for his fellow Club members and we'll be on the lookout for a lot more.

BROADWAY FRONT!



Above photo shows the Broadway send-off given a Tom Mix film by Lou Brandt, manager of Globe Theatre, New York City. The entire upper portion of the house was covered with a giant banner. What a camel had to do with Tom Mix we don't know, but one was led by an attendant dressed in Indian costume to ballyhoo the film, and the stunt attracted plenty of attention.

A NOVEL NEWSPAPER TIE-UP!

SOMETHING new in cooperative ads is always reaching Club headquarters from some corner of the country and this time honors go to Miss Anna Bell Ward, assistant general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., for promoting one of the most novel double trucks we've had the pleasure of looking at this season.

Take a look at the accompanying illustration and see if you all don't agree that Miss Ward hit upon an ingenious method to place her current attraction at the Ben Ali and names of local merchants before the public eye. Lest you cannot read the printed rules of the game the idea was to fill in names of all states in the U. S. map, number of electoral votes, an estimate of which way each state would go politically and then to color in the map in any way desired. Guest tickets ranging from one pass to a season pass were offered for the best and neatest answers. The decision was made by an appointed committee of local judges and employees of newspaper and theatre were barred from entry.

Rather a neat job, eh, and here's congratulations to this well known showwoman of Kentucky for her share in putting over such an attractive co-op stunt. We know for a fact that she received a complimentary letter from W. G. Bishop, field publicity manager for M-G-M for promoting such a timely ad that he laid plans to use the same idea in other cities. Note that each state represented a local merchant. If you can't adapt the same idea to your needs before next election time, save it until then. Thank Miss Ward for this.

hails from out in Los Angeles, Calif., where he skippers the Fox-Westlake Theatre for West Coast Theatres. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in the Round Table Club and want him to know that we're mighty glad to have him with us. Mort has 2,000 seats to fill in the Westlake and we're going to check up on him until he lets his fellow Round Tablers know how he performs this feat of showmanship. What say, Mort? Drop us a line in the near future.

sends the Club his application for membership from far off Haines, Alaska, where he holds down the post of co-manager of the Coliseum Theatre. His name adds another to the Farthest North contingent of the Round Table and we'll look forward to hearing what he and his associates are doing to sell shows in their neck of the country. Shoot along some information, Charlie, for the gang will be interested to get a line on showbusiness conditions up and around Haines.

is another Californian to join the ranks of the Round Table army and he has charge of the Fox-Manchester Theatre in Los Angeles. It is also a great pleasure to acknowledge his application for Club membership and to know that he, too, is heartily in accord with a wish to help keep up the good work being done universally by every man in this outfit. Let's hear from you regularly, Roy, as to what you and your staff are doing to boost the box office.

manages the Hollywood Theatre out in Detroit, Mich., and he's still another new Club member in line for introduction to the rest of this organization. Meet the rest of the fellows, Merrill, and then prove to all of them that you intend to do your share of the good work by sending along some show-selling ideas we can pass along the line. What was that last stunt you put over that helped boost trade? Shoot along an account of it and we'll do the rest from this end of the Table.

sends the Club his application for membership from Ottawa, Kansas, where he performs the dual role of managing the Fox-Strand and Webster Theatres. We are glad, indeed, to list his name among this great army of showmen and hope that Steele will find time among his many duties to now and then let his fellow showmen know what's doing out in his town. We'll be looking for his next communication.

A. SLIMAN

is located down South in New Iberia, La., where he just recently became sole owner and manager of the Evangeline Theatre, a house formerly managed by Elias Elias. According to a photo of the Evangeline on the letterhead the house is certainly good-looking, with its long marquee and pretentious upright electric sign. Just as soon as Sliman oils up his typewriter, we'll be telling you all more about what he's doing in showbusiness.

is in charge of the Fox Theatre, a Fox-Midwesco house at Beatrice, Neb., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. Now that he has taken the vow to do his utmost to help keep these pages full of show-selling information, we'll await with interest his next communication.

is the managing director of the Chalerm Krung Theatre, a United Cinema Company house in Bangkok, Siam, and it is a pleasure to also list his name among the Club's new members. Li's application is further proof of the international scope of this organization's activities and we predict readers will be very much interested in learning what is going on in showbusiness over in Bangkok.

ED BENHAM

hails from out in Yuba City, California, and he is now another duly recorded member of this great organization of showmen. Ed broke into showbusiness back in '13, at which time he functioned same as at present—as owner-manager. Since that time he's worked for the circuits and recently completed the cycle by taking over Smith's Theatre in Yuba City, where he has been doing pretty well in spite of tough opposition. He tells us he might submit a pretty good show-selling idea to this department some time, and, then again he might not. So that's the way the matter stands at present. At any rate, we're mighty glad to have Ed with us and will let nature take its course.

informs us that he awoke on a December morning in the year 1932 and found himself a manager and, therefore, eligible for one of the framed certificates of Round Table membership which grace the offices of several thousand showmen the world over. Prior to his appointment Chet served three years as assistant manager of the Publix-Paramount Theatre in Providence, R. I., and his promotion places him at the helm of the Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I. Congratulations, Round Tabler, and now let's see what you can do to help the good work along.

holds down the job of advertising director of the Plaza and Lyric Theatres, respectively located in Fayetteville and Oak Hill, W. Va., and, in addition, acts as assistant manager of the Plaza. He's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his many fellow members and we're glad of the opportunity to present his name. LaVender should be in an excellent position to furnish this department with information it constantly seeks and we'll be on watch for his contributions. Let the gang know what's keeping you busy, J. L., and we'll pass the word along.

not only manages the Valley Theatre, Spring Valley, Ill., but has charge of art work for other Alger houses on the circuit. We are taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership and hope he, too, will do his full share toward sending in material to help keep this department the livest and most up-to-date of its kind in the world. In adidtion to word of what he's doing in the way of house management we'd like to see some samples of his art work, so shoot some dope along, Jack, at the first chance that presents itself.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

Educational Gets Volcano Subject

Educational has acquired a two-reel picture showing the undersea volcano, Krakatau, in action, and will release it as a two-reel short subject under the title, "Krakatau." The volcano is located between the islands of Java and Sumatra. J. H. Bekker and other scientists filmed the subject.

Dent Takes 10 Short Subjects

Captain Harold Auten, representing Beverly Hills Exchanges, of which Stanley Hatch is New York representative, has sold the company's 10 three-reel novelty subjects to Arthur Dent of British International Pictures and Wardour Films, London. Four of the subjects have already been completed.

Do New Musical Short Series

Master Art Products, Inc., of which E. Schwartz is president, is producing a series of musical shorts, the first of which last week was run at the Rivoli in New York. Titled "Melody Makers," the subjects show famed popular composers playing their own compositions.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Floyd Wright, former solo organist at the California and United Artists theatres of Berkeley, California, recently wed Miss Rosina Anderson of Oakland, and they are now making their home in San Francisco, where Floyd is featured organist with Horace Heidt's orchestra at the Golden Gate. . . .

Little Katherine Kaderly of the Denver theatre at Denver, Col., received reams of write-ups for her clever 1932-33 celebration organ solo. . . . Miss Kaderly is popular in Denver, having christened the twin consoles at the Paramount with Eloise (Jean) Rowan, who is now in Minneapolis. . . .

Charlie Paul, maestro of the fine orchestra at Loew's Valencia theatre, Jamaica, Long Island, is the possessor of one of the finest natural voices yours truly has ever heard in a picture theatre. . . . Recently Charlie, who is the fair-haired boy of this part of New York, surprised the audiences by singing during the overture and drew such a big hand at the finish that he rated an encore, but didn't take it. . . .

Don Carew, who found and exploited the popular Tommy McLaughlin, the new Columbia Broadcasting star, has turned over the business affairs of the warbler to his friend, Jimmy Doane, manager of Morton Downey. . . . Incidentally, Tommy is Downey's prodigy. . . . Carew is retaining the personal managership of Tommy even though he is busy as a bee working out the destiny of his new firm, which will represent artists and orchestras. . . . First of these are Frank Silver, of "Bananas" fame, and Ray Stillwell and his orchestra. . . . It is also understood that Don anticipates managing a number of film stars, with whom he is now dickering. . . .

Con Maffie, whose likeness you see below, has played in nearly every city in the United States. . . . He started out in Chicago about seven years ago and went from there to the West Coast for Publix. . . . thence to a dozen other spots for the same company. . . . Three years ago he was brought east by Warner Bros., to play the Earle, Philadelphia, going from there to the Paradise, N. Y. C., for Loew's, where he has been featured since that time. . . .

Vol. 110, No. 3 January 14, 1933

A HOLLYWOOD CONQUEST

THE casting of "Cavalcade," reviewed elsewhere in this issue, by reason of several aspects of its excellence is a proper subject for special and separate consideration. The principles applied so effectively, in the light of much current Hollywood practise, seem somewhat akin to revolution.

Outstandingly evident is the successful determination of Mr. Winfield Sheehan, who can at times be most determined, to make "Cavalcade," and nothing else. No player, and the piece has a very large cast of exceptionally able persons, was permitted in the least instance to dominate his part. For once in the history of the screen, actors have been strictly required to be actors, to play their parts as individuals in the story created by the author. "Cavalcade" was written by Mr. Noel Coward for the purpose of the limning of a certain set of facts and state of civilization in various hysterical processes of reaction and change. It was not written to wrap around the toothsome anatomy of any screen beauty, nor for the exploitation and aggrandizement of any name of stage or screen. It was written to tell a story and, in spite of all the personality traditions of the great personality chessboard and market of Hollywood, no one has been permitted to invade the narrative design.

The astonishingly effective restraints of "Cavalcade" against the many, many ways in which great material so often "goes movie" are many, but the greatest of them all is subordination of the players to their roles. No exception is fairly to be taken to any player's work in the piece, but since we are talking of roles, the performance of Una O'Connor, who played her part of "Ellen Bridges," the maid, in the stage company in London, is worthy of a special note. And Diana Wynyard, who plays "Jane Marryot," would be the star of the show if it could be a starring play. Miss Wynyard came over from London last year in the stage play "Lean Harvest" and acquired a picture engagement with MGM, but the only previous screen glimpse we have had of her was in the role of the "Princess Natasha" in "Rasputin." Now she is likely to be seen and heard more and oftener.

"WINDOW OF THE WORLD"

THERE have been considerable gusts of publicity of late, for what purpose does not appear, in behalf of the fame of General John Vicente Gomez, president of Venezuela, the genial and courtly dictator of that sector of sunshine for the last quarter of a century. And now, so we are gravely told, he sees an American film drama every night at one of his two palaces, for the purpose of keeping advised of the trend of affairs in this northern world. If he gets confused he can be forgiven.

THE CREAM OF THE SHOW

BROADWAY being also quite considerably the street of the car salesrooms, and this being also the week of the Automobile Show, we find justification in the citation of the enthusiasm of the current motor selling season as both a demonstration of and a challenge to showmanship. If the oceans of advertising and rivers of publicity are credible, the new motor merchandise is made almost entirely of selling points, which means showmanship expressed in terms of gadgets. Motors are used to ride in but they are being built to do tricks while you look at them. That's an idea for the motion picture, which is used for nothing but to be looked at.

As might have been expected after his recent splash on the printed pages and across the radio map, Mr. Walter P. Chrysler seems to be the prima donna of the auto show. Some conniving publicity person pertaining to his organization conceived the idea of an exhibit of cars all done in chromium plate and cream enamels, with a cream colored carpet and salesmen to talk and demonstrate in cream colored suits and ravishing girl models to pose in the cars all begowned in cream. The color scheme proved charming, almost modest, but when the newspaper advertisements erupted crediting Mr. Chrysler with "the cream of the show," nothing could be done about it under the "fair practices" clause of the code. He has the cream to prove it.

WHAT with the international debt situation, the Radio City Music Hall and apathy in Wall Street, the New Year started off not too well. But now the first of the seed catalogues have arrived and the green tip of one daring hyacinth has appeared on the sunny side of our Connecticut rockery. Life resumes meaning, and presently it will be spring again.

CIGARETTE CAMPAIGN

A DRIVE is on, and the tobacco trade press is all a-twitter, because of the decision of the management at the Radio City Music Hall and the RKO Roxy theatre to permit smoking in the mezzanines—which in this case means balconies about two whoops and a holler from the stage and screen. The United States Tobacco Journal suggests that certain trade leaders "act jointly in forcing upon the operators of competitive New York houses recognition of Roxy's aggressive policy. Then let trade leaders take similar action in every other community throughout the country." It might be just as well for the tobacco interests to let the motion picture exhibitor run his own policy. No general principle is involved. Broadway is not Main Street.

PLANNED PROCEDURE FOR INDUSTRY

A proposal to organize business to escape past errors and to realize future possibilities

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

THE motion picture industry while partaking of the effects of the world depression finds, in addition, upon its own doorstep at the opening of the New Year a variety of problems which cry insistently for attention.

It is of course true that a considerable number of the adverse conditions which now affect the industry are directly traceable to the disruption of the normal processes in commerce and industry. Various of the causes of the curtailment which has taken place in theatre attendance have been and are beyond the control of the industry. The shrinking of the public's purse, due to unemployment, has reduced both the actual number of theatre patrons and also the potential number of patrons to whom the motion picture might appeal. A vast number of people have simply been without the means for regular theatre attendance, irrespective of how great may have been the attraction.

BUT IT IS equally true that the industry itself and singly is accountable for several of the adverse conditions which now obtain. It is to these that the business of motion pictures might well address serious thought at the opening of this New Year.

It was perhaps inevitable that the industry in its principal departments should have partaken in some degree of the excesses which characterized the inflationary period in American business which drew to an end in the Autumn of 1929. The spirit of unbridled expansion of those days led to developments in the theatre field which cannot now escape such revision as may be necessary to adapt them to the conditions which we now face and to those conditions discernible for the near future which do not appear to make practicable the original concept of various of these developments. An early application of appropriate remedies in this connection will be both wise and salutary.

It is not yet apparent that the production branch of the industry has succeeded in gearing itself to the new requirements of the day nor has it yet been made plain that production has commenced to apply in the expected degree the lessons which are to be gained out of its considerable store of accumulated experience. Hollywood has not been adequately responsive to the developments that have been taking place generally in the fields of finance, commerce and industry. Seemingly it has held itself to be in a measure insulated against the repercussions of the new order which of course is only a fancied position unrelated to and unsupported by reality. In those respects in which Hollywood has persisted in a reactionary attitude it must presently yield for its own good and for the good of the whole industry.

The dominant satisfaction which the industry may properly entertain as it enters upon the New Year is the fact that there is no evidence whatsoever to support any suspicion which may anywhere exist that motion picture entertainment does not continue to hold preeminent position in the affections of the public. It has no rival as the people's principal form of public amusement. Its prestige and appeal remain unchallenged. Now as the most graphic of the arts, equipped to tell its stories both in image and in sound, it is destined to soar to heights which in face of the present moments of uncertainty may appear almost fantastic.

But if the challenge of present conditions, as well as those of the immediate future, is to be met successfully the industry stands in pressing need of a program of planned operations—a scheme not essentially unlike that which for productive industry generally has received high sponsorship.

INDUSTRY, broadly speaking, now faces the prospect of a narrowed margin of profit on its operations, and this only in the more favored individual instances for the present at least. To insure even this narrowed margin, united action on the part of all principal interests is necessary. There is need for much reordering and rearranging. Those conditions which once allowed an income sufficient to absorb the cost of inefficiency, waste and vanity competition are not likely to return soon if ever. Solving the problems of the day and preparing to meet those of tomorrow should not be left to haphazard procedure. There should be introduced carefully planned and carefully ordered arrangements conceived out of the accumulated knowledge and experience and executed with determination and dispatch.

The motion picture industry provides a fruitful field for the introduction of a program of planned operations. A considerable list of things that obviously and unquestionably should be done might easily be compiled. All that is necessary is a plan energized with a wholesome spirit of industry cooperation, together with the determination that the industry shall speedily put its house in order to the end of realizing those vast potentialities of profit for the business, and service to the public, which are inherent in the talking motion picture.

THE MOTION PICTURE business is unique in many respects. It is engaged in the extraordinary trade of merchandising to the public a product intended to convey emotional stimuli. In the fulfillment of this mission it stands in a position of grave responsibility to the public welfare. There necessarily must be an intimate relationship between the prosperity of the industry and the degree in which it discharges this responsibility. The principal business of the industry is to cater to the public taste. In all of its expressions in which it seeks to cultivate the public taste, rather than cater to established tastes, it must for its own and the public's welfare look upwards and not downwards. In order that this may more uniformly and more definitely be accomplished there should be formulated an appropriate policy and when the policy is arrived at, through planned procedure, it should be maintained.

There are also other corrective measures which should be introduced as both an armor of defense and a sword of progress. Many of these have as their needed objective that attribute of character which is essential to the successful conduct of important business the world over.

The motion picture and the industry behind it stand in the white glare of pitiless publicity. It has sought and obtained this position and it is proper and necessary that it should be there. But the position entails responsibilities that cannot be evaded. The business of motion pictures is one that stands eminently in need of great

HERTZ RESIGNS; SCHAEFER, DEMBOW AND COKELL ON PARAMOUNT BOARD

Zukor Denounces "Malicious Rumor" That Emanuel Cohen Is Leaving Paramount; Lauds Company's Current Product

Withdrawal of Finance Chairman from Company After 14 Months Follows Difference With Zukor Over Authority

Resignation of John Hertz last Friday as chairman of the finance committee of Paramount Publix Corporation and his withdrawal from the company, after, as he announced, a difference with President Adolph Zukor as to his authority, was followed this week by election to the board of directors of George J. Schaefer, Sam Dembow, Jr., and Walter B. Cokell, all of whom have been with the organization at least ten years. All three were appointed to the executive committee and Mr. Cokell also was appointed an assistant treasurer.

At the same time came announcement from Mr. Zukor that "there is absolutely no truth in the malicious rumor that Emanuel Cohen, vice-president in charge of production, is leaving Paramount." Mr. Cohen was suddenly summoned to New York last week. Mr. Zukor added: "He is returning in a few days to the Coast to continue the fine job he has been doing in organizing and running our studio, which is now making what I think are the best pictures this company has ever had. He has the full confidence and support of all the executives and the board of directors of the company."

Following the resignation of Mr. Hertz, it was said at Paramount that no call had been announced as yet for a meeting of the finance committee to name his successor.

Joined in November, 1931

News of the withdrawal of the finance chairman came with this announcement from Mr. Hertz:

"In November, 1931, at the suggestion of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and at the request of the president and board of directors of Paramount, I became a member of the board of directors of the company, and chairman of the finance committee. Since that time I have been active in the management of the affairs of the corporation, devoting my entire time thereto.

"Whatever I have been able to accomplish in the company's affairs has been accomplished because I had the cooperation of all the officers and the organization, without any question as to the technical limitations upon the authority of various officers. Within the last week a question has been raised by the president as to the authority of the chairman of the finance committee to continue to function as he had up to that time. I felt that I could not accomplish the purposes for which I came to the company unless I was permitted to so function, and therefore there was no alternative for me but to tender my resignation, which I have done.

"In severing my connection with Paramount, I want to express my deep appreciation for the splendid cooperation and support I have received from the company's bank creditors, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., as well as the officers, directors, and employees of the organization."

The following statement was issued by Paramount:

"During his fourteen months as chairman of the finance committee of Paramount Publix Corporation Mr. Hertz has accomplished much in the handling of the corporation's financial problem. The president and all the directors greatly regret that he now finds himself unable to continue to serve the corporation in that capacity."

From Sir William Wiseman, vice-chairman of the finance committee and member of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., bankers, came this announcement:

"In November, 1931, we suggested to the president of the Paramount Publix Corporation that John Hertz should be invited to become a director and the chairman of the finance committee. The president of the corporation, Adolph Zukor, and the board of directors, unanimously invited Mr. Hertz to fill these positions, and he has since devoted his time and energy exclusively to the affairs of the corporation, and, in spite of difficult times, has been able to establish important economies and administrative reforms.

"We greatly regret that Mr. Hertz now finds himself unable to continue to serve the corporation. His wide experience and grasp of financial and administrative problems have been of the greatest value to the corporation."

The past year has seen readjustments in Paramount's economic structure which have resulted in savings totaling millions. Future commitments, which include serial payments on investments, purchase-money notes, real estate mortgages and bond maturities, will this year be 50 per cent less than in 1932, while in 1934 they will be reduced another 30 per cent, or to 20 per cent of the total 1932 commitments.

Throughout the year cash income was slightly greater than operating disbursements. Negative costs were reduced on an average of 31 per cent a picture. General cash disbursements were $39,685,000 lower in the first 48 weeks of 1932 than in the corresponding period in 1931. Rental reductions effected by a revaluation of theatre leases totaled $3,600,000 and adjusted foreign leases saved another $243,000. As a result, real estate taxes were reduced $173,196 and insurance charges $270,000, with $325,000 in insurance charges estimated for the full year. Payroll reductions in the last 16 months now represent weekly savings of $186,000, equal to $6,000,000 for 1932 and an estimated $10,000,000 for 1933. Realty savings in the year totaled $7,000,000. Additional details of these economies appeared in the HERALD issue of December 24.

Came In With Lasker, Wrigley

When Mr. Hertz entered Paramount 14 months ago, he was accompanied by Albert D. Lasker and the late William Wrigley, Jr., both of whom also became members of the board of directors.

Mr. Hertz was founder and chairman of Yellow Cab Company of Chicago and of Yellow Truck and Coach Corporation and head of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company in New York, as well as a director of the First National Bank of Chicago. He is the dominant factor in the Thompson restaurant chain of Chicago.

The executive committee of the Paramount board of directors now consists of Mr. Zukor, Ralph A. Kohn, Emanuel Cohen, Messrs. Schaefer, Dembow and Cokell, with Austin C. Keough and Emil Shauer as alternates.

Mr. Schaefer, vice-president of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, has been with the company since 1920. Mr. Dembow, executive vice-president of Publix Theatres Corporation, in charge of all theatres, joined the organization in 1923, and Mr. Cokell in May, 1920, in charge of the budget and statistical departments. A year ago Mr. Cokell became assistant to the chairman of the finance committee.

The past year has seen a rapid succession of changes in executive personnel in Paramount, climaxed October 29 by the resignation of Sam Katz, who opposed the decentralization policy then under way. It was in January, 1932, that Sidney R. Kent left the company. Then in April Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production, was requested to take a three months' leave, and later he was succeeded by Emanuel Cohen. Resignations in the following months included those of B. P. Schulberg, managing director of production; Herman Wobber, John D. Clark, Charles E. McCarthy, Harry Ballance and a number of others in lesser capacities.

REVISED AMORTIZATION VITAL IN GAUGING ACTUAL CURRENT INCOME

Wall Street Journal Says Many Problems Remain To Be Solved; Declares Improved Picture Quality Should Help

The important strides which motion picture companies have made in recent months in "putting their houses in order," and in reconditioning their economic structures on a sounder basis, are recognized by Wall Street's conservative Wall Street Journal, of Dow, Jones. It was pointed out, however, that "many problems remain to be solved, with public spending still subnormal and a trend toward lower admission prices in evidence. One of the most important achievements of the year has been establishment of new and more drastic scales of film amortization, in line with current conditions in the industry."

An optimistic note was sounded regarding the improvement in picture quality in recent months. This improvement should react favorably on income, it was said. "The moving picture industry, having passed through the most difficult year in its history, is looking forward to another year of readjustment and retrenchment in which the results of the work already accomplished should begin to take effect. However, the problem of budgeting expenses to meet a continued decline in income is still present."

Evidently, Wall Street has taken full cognizance of the fact that the industry made quite some progress in the past twelve-month in adjusting operating conditions by reducing office overhead and executive expense; lowering negative costs due to studio economies and to a better scheduling of pictures "which saves waste of time by high-priced actors." Theatre decentralization, which reduced home office expense, and the setting up of new and more drastic policies of film amortization in line with the new scale of income were said to have helped the general situation.

The revised amortization program, while obviously neither an economy nor a cause of lower earnings, was said to be of primary importance in showing film companies and their stockholders what their actual profits are under current income. Previously, the rate of charging off films was of necessity based on tables of experience, and obviously a marked decline in the available income of the industry made it necessary to change the rate at which amortization of film costs is written off. In this connection, the Wall Street Journal said:

"Silent films had a certain well established average life on which tables of amortization were based. Sound films, which cost more on the average, and at first earned much more than silent films, later turned out to have a shorter life—that is, a greater part of their total rentals were received in the first few months of release. This obviously meant that a larger portion of the cost had to be charged off in the early weeks of release. In the last year the sharp decline in box office attendance and available income required another and more drastic revision in amortization rates. The erection of de luxe houses all over the country in the last few years, the more rapid release of films in territories outside the big cities and the general trend toward a more rapid turnover of films are additional factors in the changing conditions.

"Paramount-Publix Corp. has set up a new scale of film amortization which at present is the most drastic followed by any company in the industry, since it charges off 50 per cent of the cost of films in the first six weeks of release and 95.9 per cent of cost in the first 26 weeks. This scale is applied to the 90 per cent of negative and positive film costs allocated to domestic business, the remaining 10 per cent being allocated to foreign business and amortized under a separate scale.

"The following table of Paramount's present amortization shows cumulative portion of domestic cost written off:

1 week	10%	9 weeks	68%
2 weeks	19%	12 weeks	80%
3 weeks	27%	16 weeks	89%
4 weeks	35%	20 weeks	92.7%
5 weeks	43%	26 weeks	95.9%
6 weeks	50%	52 weeks	100%

"Obviously a film is practically all written off within six months after release.

Contrasts New and Old Scales of Leading Companies; Cites Operating Adjustments and Lower Costs for Negatives

"Under the old scale Paramount allocated 85 per cent of film costs to the United States and 15 per cent to foreign business. Of the 85 per cent, 70 per cent to 75 per cent was written off in the first three months (12 weeks) and the remainder within a year. Foreign films allocation was written off in two years.

"The following table shows the new amortization scale of Warner Bros. on negative costs compared with the old rate:

	New rate	Old rate
13 weeks	51½%	42½%
26 weeks	73	65¾
39 weeks	84¼	79¼
52 weeks	93¾	86½
65 weeks	100	93
88 weeks	..	100

"Positive cost which is only about 10 per cent of negative cost is written off at a slightly more rapid rate, 64½ per cent in 13 weeks, 90 per cent in 26 weeks, and 100 per cent in a year.

"Radio Keith Orpheum Corp.'s new scale and old scale of amortization compare as follows:

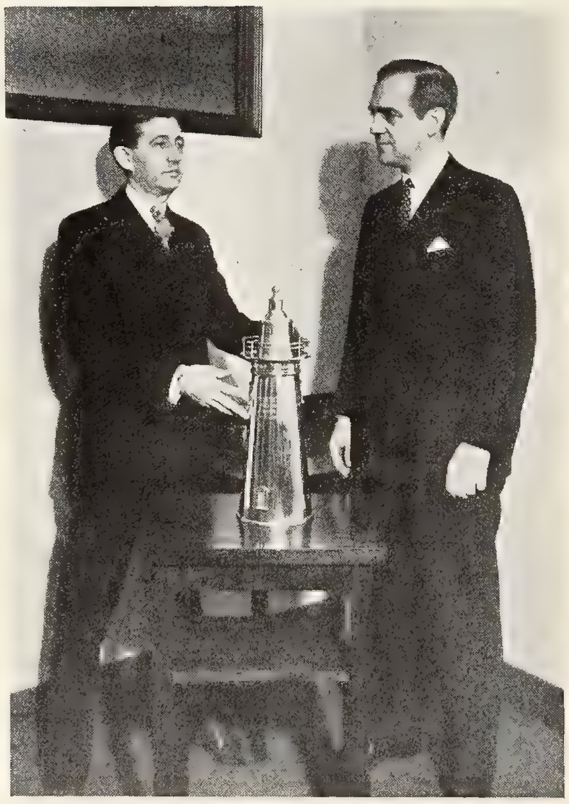
	New rate	Old rate
4 weeks	17%	14%
13 weeks	55½	..
24 weeks	73¾	70¼
26 weeks	75½	..
36 weeks	86½	87¼
52 weeks	95	95¾
78 weeks	100	..

"Positives are written off on about the same scale as Warner Bros.

"Fox Film Corp., in amortizing its features negative costs, formerly charged off 50 per cent of gross domestic rentals on each picture weekly for 52 weeks with the deficit if any charged off in the 52d week. This has subsequently been increased to 70 per cent of rentals. For internal accounting purposes 1-45 of negative cost is charged off each week for 45 weeks. Half of gross domestic rentals is applied to the 67 per cent of the cost of feature pictures allocated to domestic business. The remaining 33 per cent of cost is allocated to foreign business and amortized beginning with the time of foreign release, under a similar scale.

"Loew's, Inc., has recently adopted a new and more drastic scale of film amortization as stated in its annual report recently published, but a detailed schedule is not at present available."

RKO Honored



The M.P.P.D.A gives an award each year to that motion picture exchange in the United States which has the best fire prevention record. At the headquarters of the M.P.P.D.A. on Tuesday, this trophy was presented by Will H. Hays to RKO for 1932, and received by Ned Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution for RKO, who accepted it on behalf of Jack Osserman, the RKO Chicago branch manager, and the entire personnel of his office. The Chicago fire warden and the Fire Prevention Committee, who made the inspection, rated this exchange 100 per cent plus for the entire year.

STATIC in RADIO CITY

by TERRY RAMSAYE

IF the seating capacity of the Radio City Music Hall is precisely 6,200, then just exactly 6,199 persons must have been aware at the initial performance that they were eye witnesses to something tremendously more astonishing than the opening of the world's biggest theatre. It was the unveiling of the world's best "bust."

Carefully utilizing every imposing modern resource from money to metallurgy, with the single exception of plain common sense, RKO and its executive control have attained a negative triumph beyond compare in the history of the amusement industry.

And such a pity that it must go into the pages of amusement history. What has occurred and is occurring at the Radio City Music Hall and its lesser neighbor, the RKO Roxy motion picture theatre, inevitably will be accredited to the motion picture industry, with which it is, in an accurate sense, scarcely related.

Before this the motion picture industry had full and plenty of the problems common to American industry, plus some internal problems of its own. The RKO misadventure at Radio City is likely to leave its unhappy impress on screen destiny for decades, and yet it is in truth an external matter, the magnificently spectacular culmination of an ill-conducted invasion.

THE RADIO CITY THEATRE SITUATION with all of its implications and involvements is merely the currently conspicuous and overwhelming component of a somewhat larger picture in which are innumerable detailed bits quite as choice if not so large. The Radio Corporation of America came into this industry seeking to realize upon the possession of a new kit of tools, the sound element of the talking picture, somewhat as a sequel to the rise of radio and the National Broadcasting Company, which was built on kindred tools, vacuum tubes and microphones. The National Broadcasting Company grew up without a background of precedent in the new art and little that resembled effective competition. The motion picture industry, however, had been evolving and building importantly since the nickelodeon dawn of 1905. It had achieved no ultimate perfection but it had some aspects of attainment and stability.

One of the first gestures of the RCA institution was an occasion, which achieved no public exposition, when the declaration was made that the corporation would engage in the large scale production and merchandising of home-sound-movies regardless of what might happen to the existing theatre-marketed industry. Peace was made and the project for home-sound-movies took care of itself. Executive control of RKO was installed in a personage who stood as alone as Napoleon at Elba in his Broadway office, but otherwise went rather Hollywood. Further avowal of what might loosely be called policy came with sympathy, support and a transient partnership with a project which envisioned superimposition upon an already amply seated theatre machine of a nationwide, mayhap world wide, chain of chromium plated, coin-in-the-slot, grandiose store shows. A little more than a year ago the mighty of RCA foresaw Trans-Lux transforming the motion picture map and sweeping before it the whole existing theatre plant. That seems to have taken care of itself, quite.

But back then while the Trans-Lux turnstiles were just beginning to click in a promised crescendo of national triumph for the reinstated store-show, the little theatre, the engineers were making the drawings for the biggest theatres, while steam shovels ripped into the heart of Manhattan to make way for them. Both ends were being played against the middle, against the normal evolutions of a quarter of a century of screen theatres. Now that has taken care of itself, too—but at what cost.

TO THOSE WHOSE REFLECTIONS AT this point turn toward Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel, the picture showman whose name and impulses, not to say inspirations, are so involved in the project, it may be observed that his very fame itself might well have been expected to protect him from the opportunity to dream in brick and stone and steel so expansively. It may be remarked in analogy that in the motor car world there are great names on the track and road like Dario Resta, Ralph DePalma and "Cannon Ball" Baker, but Kettering, Ford and Chrysler are not known at any time to have considered turning the motor car industry over to any of them.

There is enough of the RKO-Radio City situation so that any number of executives might have a share of the abundant wreaths of wild raspberry, and they are well won, but it would seem that Mr. Merlin H. Aylesworth is to be found occupying the best seat in the front row.

Something like a year ago Mr. Aylesworth became the executive chief of the RKO project. It was a move of considerable presumption, by all who ordained it, this bicycling of a president between National Broadcasting Company and RKO with its very considerable job of heading the array of production, distribution and exhibition activities. Mr. Aylesworth's part time job already had been proved something more than a full time job for his predecessor. Mr. Aylesworth's most signal expression as president of RKO was a speech made at a Motion Picture Academy gathering in Hollywood forecasting a state of bankruptcy for the industry.

One of the few conspicuously observable and indicative decisions of his administration has been the recent negotiation for the continuance of a production administration regime which gave him "the bird," meaning in this instance "The Bird of Paradise," and "Rock-a-Bye" which was made twice with two costs and which would have to be made over again with a third if it were to be a motion picture acceptable at any box office. Incidentally the debacle of "Rock-a-Bye" is a considerable further invasion of the stellar status of Miss Constance Bennett, who very presently will be found depreciated as completely as Miss Ann Harding has been, by the same process.

Miss Harding and Miss Bennett were two of the more important assets acquired by RKO from Pathe and inherited by the present administration of the concern. They were important box office personalities with large promise for development, considerably more important to the company, to the exhibitor and the public, than the sort of stone-and-steel in which Mr. Aylesworth and his colleagues appear to have so unhappily reposed their faith.

None of this Hollywood procedure appears to pave the way for a brighter prospect for product, or for a production administration calculated to adjust itself adequately to the obvious and inevitable requirements of today and tomorrow. The intangibles of production seem ruled by the same strange order of fourth dimensional reasoning that has given us the great open places of the Radio City theatres.

IT IS TRUE THAT MR. AYLESWORTH was invited to his seat in RKO sometime after the sequence of events leading up to where X marks the spot in Sixth avenue had been started. It is also true, however, that a year is a respectable interval of time in this industry, and no executive of RKO could have been unaware that along about the last week in 1932 something important would have to occur on the two giant stages of the Radio City theatres.

It has been somewhat more privately than publicly said that Mr. Aylesworth had little option about assuming the RKO presidency if he were to continue in his happier job as president of the National Broadcasting Company. But, anyway, he did take the additional responsibility, and what he has done about it, and had caused to be done about it, is about as apparent as the Grand Canyon—with about the same cubic content of nothing.

PROTECTION DEMANDS UNFAIR, SAYS HORWITZ

Lowering Admissions Has Changed Situation, Declares Cleveland Exhibitor; Asks Producer Fight Twin Bill

Reductions of admission prices have so changed the exhibition scene that first-run theatres have no justification for demanding the same amount of protection as heretofore received, says M. B. Horwitz of Cleveland, operating the Washington Theatre Circuit. The same development makes the exclusive run unfair and also makes unjust an insistence upon the same level of rentals from the indenpedent exhibitor as he paid last year, Mr. Horwitz declared in a letter to the HERALD, pointing out that all these phases of exhibition and distribution policy are linked by the one fact of lowered admissions.

Furthermore, the writer holds, the distributor should refuse to permit the showing of his product on a double feature program, nor on any two-for-one coupon policy, and he should insist that certain pictures in the group sold cannot be exhibited at an admission price of, say, less than 25 cents in the neighborhood theatres.

Declares Situation Changed

Mr. Horwitz, it will be recalled, was a representative of the Cleveland exhibitors in their suit against producers and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in which the subject of zoning and protection played a star role. The protracted discussions finally came to an end with a settlement that included a realignment of the protection program in the Cleveland territory.

"When the discussion of protection came up in those sessions," said Mr. Horwitz, "the claim was made that because the first-run theatres charged so much more than the neighborhood theatres they were entitled to the protection they were asking. Granting that these first-run theatres were entitled to this protection because of the difference in admission prices, they charging from 20 cents to 45 cents more than the neighborhood theatres, now with the price-slashing by these same first-run theatres which, in many instances, has lessened the gap in admission prices down to as little as 5 cents, and, in the most extreme cases, referring to the 10 cent houses, a difference of 25 cents, can you for any reason see why the first-runs should now receive as much protection as they received heretofore?"

Prices—and Receipts

Mr. Horwitz cites the prices now obtaining in Cleveland theatres, and then questions the justification of an exclusive run policy. "I particularly refer," he writes, "to the house playing exclusive pictures and doing so at prices of 25 cents matinee and 35 cents evenings, and I know of theatres that are charging 25 and 30 cents evening prices. Can the producers now claim that the reason they do not want to sell these 25 and 30 cent houses is because their admission price is so much lower than their first-runs?"

"It is a known and conceded fact," the theatre owner writes, "that the producers are receiving far less revenue from the first-run theatres than they received the season before; first, because of the average drop in business in all theatres, and, second, because of the big drop in admission prices, which eventually lessens the gross receipts. But on the other hand I know of several producers right here in Cleveland who have insisted on the same prices from the independent exhibitor that was paid the previous season. Is the independent exhibitor a miracle man that he can pay the same prices as last year? His attendance has dropped in comparison as much as the first-runs, and his admission prices have dropped but not in as great a proportion as the first-run theatres have."

In suggesting producer effort to eliminate the double feature and the two-for-one, as well as to limit exhibition of certain product according to admission scale, Mr. Horwitz warns that the exhibitor alone cannot solve these problems. "It is the tendency of all exhibitors to want to play the best product made," he said, "and if such a plan could be worked out, I believe you would find a great majority of the better neighborhood theatres would immediately raise their admission prices."

Paramount Wins Southern Verdict

A statement from Paramount's home office, released Wednesday, said:

"Before Federal Court Judge Glenn, at Florence, S. C., a jury awarded to Paramount Publix a verdict in their favor ammounting to approximately $2,500, against J. M. O'Dowd, operating the O'Dowd theatre in Florence. The decision is considered by the motion picture distributing industry to be one of the most important ever given on film contracts in the southeast, mostly because of the nature of the suit, and also because it involved the important question of whether an exhibitor had the right to break a contract and stop playing pictures because of his personal opinion as to the quality."

Goldsmith Begins Consulting Practice in Sound Field

Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, whose resignation as vice-president and general engineer of RCA became effective January 1, begins this month a general consulting practice in the broadcasting and sound picture field. He will also be consulting engineer for RCA.

Dr. Goldsmith will retain all of his executive organization posts, including that of president of the SMPE. His offices are at 570 Lexington avenue, New York.

good-will on the part of the public and its leaders in all branches of human activity. Such good-will, while an essential need of the industry, may also be one of its greatest assets. Every effort, however great, to obtain and maintain such good-will is well worth the while.

It is therefore suggested that the business of motion pictures give thought to a comprehensive program of planned procedure in order that it shall be adequately equipped and prepared to avoid repetition of past mistakes and to realize proportionately the vast promise of the future.

Report du Ponts Seeking Eastman

Impending acquisition of Eastman Kodak Company by the du Ponts of Delaware was reported Wednesday by the New York American in a signed article by Julius G. Berens, financial editor, which said:

"Operating with secrecy the du Pont interests have been negotiating for control of Eastman or of sufficient stock interest to represent working control. Highest ranking executives of du Pont refused either to 'confirm or deny' that they seek control of Eastman. It was conceded, however, that the information 'might be premature.'

"By acquisition of Eastman the du Ponts would secure the greatest part of the business of supplying the motion picture industry with film, cameras, projecting machines and similar paraphernalia. Du Pont now manufactures film but Kodak has been the largest factor in the field."

After contacting the home office at Wilmington, Newton I. Steers, president of du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation in New York, said: "There have been many unfounded rumors. This is one of them." Eastman officially answered the report through its president, William G. Stuber, who said: "If the du Pont company is absorbing Eastman Kodak I know nothing about it. We hear reports like that off and on. If anyone would know about such a thing I think I would."

Wurtzel Fox Unit Producer; Gain Will Be Studio Manager

J. J. Gain, former general manager of the Paramount New York studio, and recently named casting head at the Fox Coast studio, will replace Sol Wurtzel as executive manager of the studio, it was announced by Sidney R. Kent, president, on his arrival on the Coast this week. Mr. Wurtzel will become a unit producer.

Mr. Wurtzel will be the second unit producer on the Fox lot, as Jesse L. Lasky is producing eight for the company under a recent contract. With Mr. Wurtzel producing probably six to eight pictures a year, pressure of work will be taken from Winfield Sheehan, in charge of production.

HAM AND EGGS FROM THE STUDIOS

Kate Smith's Picture Is Real Food, Says Meehan; So Too of Warner Comedy of Bridge Table

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

With no desire to make puns, we wish to report that the big event of the week on the preview front was Kate Smith. Paramount previewed her first starring picture, aptly titled by her familiar ether call, "Hello Everybody."

We were edified by Mr. Terry Ramsaye's recent request for more ham and eggs, less caviar, on the screen—with which we are in accord 105 per cent. "Hello Everybody" is ham and eggs. And, recognizing the tremendous radio popularity of its portly star, it looks as if it should be interesting to cinema shoppers. If they go inside, unless they have the caviar taste, they are likely to find themselves getting their money's worth.

The plot is as venerable as "Shore Acres," the power company trying to steal the ancestral farm. Kate fights them, lands a broadcasting contract which enables her to carry on the legal battle, catapults to national fame over the radio, and there you are. Which means that in the last half of the picture, mostly you see as well as hear Kate Smith. She has a lovely personality. During the filming she captivated everyone with her simple wholesomeness. She has a grand smile, and when she sings and smiles, and smiles and sings, it is very pleasant to take.

Charley Grapewin, Frank Darien and a comparative newcomer named Fern Emmett handle the rural comedy, the David Harum type, most entertainingly. Randolph Scott and Sally Blane carry along the romance pleasantly. Bill Seiter had the good sense to let Kate just be herself, and Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow have provided half a dozen sweet ballads for her to sing.

A Bridge Comedy

In line with their established policy of turning out topical stories, Warners previewed "Grand Slam," devoted to the most popular of indoor sports, bridge. Unlike the bridge players, it does not take the subject seriously. It is treated for laugh purposes, and quite successfully, judging from the preview audience reaction. An unusual phase is the appearance of Paul Lukas in a comedy role, which he does to the queen's taste. There is a lot of fun in "Grand Slam" and it should have a wide appeal.

Warners announced this week, by the way, that they would start off the year with a big spurt. In addition to six pictures now in production, thirteen more were said to be ready for shooting, scripts completed and final casting under way.

Not much else to report in the way of new pictures. Sort of a lull over the holidays, though there are a number in the final editing which will pop out very shortly. December never is very much of a production month, especially the latter half.

The big Fox leader, "Cavalcade," was to burst upon Hollywood Thursday at the Chinese theatre, with a Sid Grauman prologue, with Prexy Sidney Kent in town for it, and the cinemalites all out for the event. Winfield Sheehan is receiving plenty of congratulations on all sides for what admittedly was a tricky job to do.

The biggest Los Angeles disturbance of the week was over advertising copy on Ruth Chatterton's "Frisco Jenny," in which Jenny tells what she did with the ten commandments, what she will do with any new ones, and so on. A terrific local yowl went up; newspaper editors were stormed by irate readers. The Hays office was raked over the coals, too. Serious threats were made of censorship as a measure of reprisal if it happened again, and the threats came from powerful sources. The Los Angeles Times advised the theatre exploiters their copy must be in 24 hours in advance for okay if they wanted to be certain of its acceptance.

Hollywood Folk Jittery

Paramount's production organization is all of a dither once more, following the sudden summoning of Emanuel Cohen to New York and the resignation of John Hertz. [Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, stated later in New York that "there is absolutely no truth in the malicious rumor that Emanuel Cohen, vice president in charge of production, is leaving Paramount."—Ed.] Despite the generally satisfactory product the studio has been turning out the past few months, changes in executive setups there have kept artists and writers on pins and needles. Just about the time the ink has been dry on some boss's statement that everything was under control, a change would be announced. Like almost everyone else in America, Hollywood folk are pretty jittery these days.

Then there was the sudden week-end flareup with Fraulein von Dietrich. Paramount sued her in the federal courts for alleged failure to prepare herself to go into "Song of Songs." Within 48 hours the suit was withdrawn and Dietrich announced through her attorney that she would make the picture, but that she still did not consider the role suitable. Local sympathy is with Rouben Mamoulian, who has to direct her while in this mood. The temporary truce did not include any promise that the fair Marlene would stop appearing publicly in men's pants.

The genial Mr. Pat Casey, who suavely smooths out the wrinkles in cinematic labor disputes, is back in town after his hectic days with the projectionists in Manhattan. After surveying the "local situation," he blandly announced there was nothing wrong out here. In contrast, of course, there isn't. A few minor disputes have arisen through general cuts in wages, but nothing which cannot be readily adjusted. Pat could handle those to the satisfaction of all concerned with one hand tied behind him.

Ben Schulberg started plenty of discussion around the Writers club by announcing that in his opinion "no author should be under contract and assured of a weekly salary regardless of the type of work he turns out."

The writers, of course, have varied opinions. Undoubtedly the trend is in favor of short term writer contracts except in the cases of a few aces who practically can write their own tickets. It is now more the fashion to engage a writer to do one script at a time at an established figure. The figure usually is split up something like this: A payment is made when the first treatment is submitted. If it is satisfactory the writer is told to go ahead with a detailed treatment. If not, the deal ends right there. If he goes ahead, another payment is made when the detailed treatment is accepted. Final payment is made when the shooting script, with dialogue inserted, is accepted.

Muller Awarded Monopoly Verdict

A federal jury in the United States district court for the southern district of Indiana, at Indianapolis, this week returned a verdict of $40,189.50 in favor of Harry Muller, Anderson, Ind., exhibitor, in his suit charging conspiracy in restraint of trade and violation of the Clayton anti-trust act against Fox, Universal, United Artists, Pathe, RKO and Tiffany.

The verdict is seen as establishing an important precedent in trade practice under similar circumstances. Prior to the taking of the case by the jury, Electrical Research Products, Inc., also a defendant, had been eliminated when Federal Judge Balzell had ordered the jury to return a verdict in its favor. The action led to the belief that the plaintiff would lose his case.

The suit, originally brought in October, 1930, involved $600,000 damages. The jury's verdict will automatically be tripled under the provisions of the Clayton act and the defense will also be required to pay attorneys' fees, estimated at approximately $20,000. The suit revolved about Mr. Muller's alleged inability to procure film after he had failed to pay a $300 arbitration award to Fox. Defense attorneys have refused to discuss the possibilities of an appeal being taken from the verdict.

"U" Deal for England

CAVALCADE

as seen at the Gaiety Theatre, New York

by TERRY RAMSAYE

> And behold a pale horse, and he that sat upon him, his name was Death, and hell followed him. And power was given to him over the four parts of the earth, to kill with sword, with famine, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.
> APOCALYPSE 6:8

Now "Cavalcade" has come to the screen to warn us again that the four horsemen of the Apocalypse still ride us down to doom. It is the mea culpa of Civilization recited in a sweep of spectacle, pageantry and drama for which the motion picture is the only capable medium.

It is to be taken as a gesture of magnificent daring, in keeping quite with screen tradition, that the Fox Film Corporation and its production chief, Mr. Winfield Sheehan, should fling this challenging picture into the world of today. With its vast cost it is extraordinary speculation; with its content of emotion and thought it is tremendous adventure in showmanship.

"Cavalcade" will be found impressive, absorbing, alike to those who also think as well as to those who can, and do, but feel. It is, by force of the motion picture, a more fluent restatement of the observations of Mr. Noel Coward, the author, pertaining to the bitter comedy of the civilized portions of the human race, seen for the most part through the eyes of a wife and mother in the span of a generation.

Major Expression

This "Cavalcade," apart from our more immediate concern with it as remarkable screen merchandise of today, is impressive for the place which it occupies, or is likely to be found to occupy presently, in the flow of major motion picture expression. In the amazingly superior technique of the modern camera it says again, more emphatically, what the late Mr. Thomas H. Ince set down in "Civilization," what Mr. David Wark Griffith essayed to say in the splendid incoherence of "Intolerance," what Vicente Blasco Ibañez was thinking about when he wrote his "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which found its way to the screen as somewhat more of a drama of amour than fate. Coincidentally it is to be set down here that the same Mr. Richard Rowland, who so affected the course of commercial screen history by his impulsively intuitive election to make the Ibañez story in the silent years ago, is again an instrument of destiny in bringing "Cavalcade" into the realm of motion picture attention.

Pictorially the piece marks a definite assimilation of the best in modern camera technique. The photography is accredited to Mr. Ernest Palmer. It utilizes most of the more recently acquired capacities of the camera with a most complete acceptance and none of the touches of self-consciousness of "angles, trolleys and zooms" which have so often come between the spectator and the story in the last few years of Hollywood. Partly, perhaps, this has been achieved in the eye-education of the spectator, but certainly in "Cavalcade" the camera is never permitted to get too smart at the expense of the story.

And while it is warranted more as a generalization concerning current production than as an observation concerning "Cavalcade," one wonders why, when hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent on the pictorial and verbal content of screen production, with the world combed for talent, at least a sixpence of thought might not be given now and then toward the simple matter of achieving for main and credit titles typography that would at least not be invasive of the impression of quality in the material that follows. The screen has little indeed to do with the printed word, but the little that it has is, in the main, far from magnificent. There is an art of typography and it has its competent authorities. Typography on the screen 27 feet high by 36 feet wide tends to be conspicuous.

It is but incidental that the story, made entirely in the Fox West Coast studios, is British, that its cast and locales are British. This mayhap will help the picture a bit in the rest of the English-speaking world, but it is not at the expense of an intelligent American interest.

Narrative Technique Competent

The story opens with the impact of the high crisis of the Boer-British war, during the siege of Mafeking, on the upper-class London household of Robert and Jane Marryot. The story includes drawing room and servants' hall, picking up the all too human strands of the lives of the Bridges, butler and maid, and weaving them through, with the rise of the second generation, in a narrative technique which competently runs from the minutiae of the cook, crying into the pastry batter to the moving of troop ships, and takes in its stride everything from the cooing of young love to London raided by Zeppelins and the hell of Flanders fields. Queen Victoria dies, the Titanic sinks, the world goes warring and society cockeyed, jazz is born. Through it all in a glamored dignity, Jane Marryot, and Robert, becoming the while Lady Jane and Sir Robert, keep the faith of the values of the old order, maintaining against all that breaks about them a citadel from which they see with tolerant, questioning eyes, but do not accept. It would appear that in this fashion Mr. Coward is seeking to say to us that, despite the change, change, change, the hectic rout of the race and its jumbling of codes and fashions, the hope for Tomorrow lies yet in the fundamentals of principle, honor and virtue, unchanged eternals.

That the film "Cavalcade" should do this so competently, so lucidly and with none of those banalities and proclamations of the obvious which have so often made the screen a hissing among the intelligent, is a triumph. A hundred times or more in the two hours of film speeding at 90 feet a minute the direction has opportunity to slip down into pathos and blah and does not. It is directed by Frank Lloyd. As a stage production it ran in London for some 400 and odd performances in 11 months and it has been one of the most vigorously discussed, assayed, evaluated and debated pieces of material between London and Broadway these several years.

Won Critics' Approval

The picture opened at the Gaiety in Broadway on Thursday night and won general approval of the critics of the public press. The house, with some 800 seats, has been sold out since and considerably in advance. The selling program for the picture in detail has not been announced. It is assumed that at least for certain key cities it will be presented as a roadshow. Incidental to the Gaiety showing, it is preceded by a Magic Carpet of Movietone devoted to the beauties of Capri containing photography of a rare quality, fit in tempo and quality to be a prelude to "Cavalcade." It is there just to let the house get seated, but it is good enough to justify being on time.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Lloyd. From the play by Noel Coward. Screen play by Reginald Berkeley. Continuity by Sonya Levien. Assistant director, William Tummel. Director of dialogue, Goerge Hadden. War scenes by William Cameron Menzies. Art director, William Darling. Film editor, Margaret Clancy. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Sound recorder, J. E. Aiken. Ladies' costumes by Earl Luick. Release date undetermined. Running time, 110 minutes.

2,000-FOOT REEL ADOPTION SEEN AS CERTAINTY BY LESTER COWAN

Academy Executive Secretary Leaves for Coast Following Favorable Reception to Plan for Revising Ten Practices

Proposals of Research Council for Technical Readjustment Expected by Cowan to Meet with Approval of Companies

Favorable reception has met all of the ten projects embodied in the program for correcting certain technical practices, which was proposed by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The adoption of a standard 2,000-foot reel length is a certainty, according to Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Council, on the eve of his departure for the west coast this week.

"The industry will definitely adopt the 2,000-foot reel," said Mr. Cowan. "The reception of all the other projects has been so favorable that there is little doubt but they also will be accepted by the producing companies, distributors, circuits and equipment manufacturers." Mr. Cowan has been in New York conferring with home office executives of distributors, theatres and exchanges, and leading equipment manufacturers.

Four of the Academy's ten recommendations for improving certain trade practices were discussed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week. These embraced uniform use of a 2,000-foot reel to hold 1,700 feet of film; revised higher quality for release prints; standardization of format of scripts and an investigation of film preservatives. Reports by the Research Council on the remaining six recommendations follow:

STUDY OF CORRECTION OF DISTORTION IN PROJECTION

Committee

John Livadary, Chairman; Dr. Burton F. Miller.

Digest of Preliminary Report

As the result of studies to date the committee reported that it has been found impractical to seek a method for the correction of either the keystone effect or the non-uniformity of focus without considering both simultaneously, as any method attempting to correct the latter will affect the former.

Action of Council

The procedure of the committee to date was approved and the Council authorized the Academy Executive Secretary to communicate with the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company, the optical division of the Bell and Howell Company and other manufacturers regarding the desired cooperation.

STUDY OF ECONOMIES IN RECORDING

Committee

E. H. Hansen, Chairman; C. Roy Hunter, Nathan Levinson, Wesley C. Miller.

Objectives

To further the development of the new techniques. To gather all available information on present studio practices of split film recording, correlate this data and re-distribute it to the companies concerned in order to reduce duplication of effort and expense of individual action by each studio.

Digest of Preliminary Report

A symposium survey of the various developments in sound recording technique has been conducted by the committee. A report has been prepared for distribution to the various studio technical department executives. On the basis of studies to date, the committee stated that additional economies may be effected by modification in the technique of recording and film handling. The committee recommended that a further study be made, especially of the single system of recording and editing with a view to possible adaptation of all or portions of this system to the various studio organizations.

Action of Council

The procedure of the committee to date was approved; the distribution of the symposium report of the committee to the sound and laboratory executives of the various studios was approved and the committee was authorized to conduct the recommended further investigation.

STUDY OF MORE EFFICIENT USE OF THE 35MM. FILM AREA

Problem

The addition of the sound track and the changes in image frame brought about by the requirements of sound pictures have resulted in considerable areas of the standard 35 mm. film not being used. The width of the sound track is now matted off in the camera from the negative. On both the negative and positive approximately 14 per cent of the length of the film is now taken up by frame lines.

Committee

Douglas Shearer, Chairman; John Cass, Carl Dreher, Bert Glennan, K. F. Morgan, J. M. Nickolaus.

Digest of Preliminary Report

The committee has been investigating the various possibilities for economies outlined at the last meeting of the Council and has been making recording and photography tests to determine the practicality of the ideas advanced. As the many complications inherent in developments along this line necessitate a careful consideration of all points before a decision is announced, the committee requested the authorization of the Council to proceed with the investigation now in process.

Action of Council

The procedure of the committee to date was approved and the committee authorized to continue its investigations.

ELIMINATION OF BLIMPS THROUGH DEVELOPMENT OF A SILENT CAMERA

Problem

Four years after the introduction of sound, the studios are still using heavy, clumsy, expensive blimps to shield camera noise from the microphone. Manufacturers have promised a silent camera, but no satisfactory camera sufficiently silent to be worked in closeups without the aid of any external silencing device has been put on the market. While the comparative tests conducted by the Academy last year stimulate the improvement of blimps, the definite and urgent demand of the production studios for a camera sufficiently quiet not to require external silencing devices has not been met.

Committee

Virgil Miller, Chairman; John Arnold, John Boyle, John Cass, William Eglinton, Bert Glennon, Lorin D. Grignon, Kenneth Lambert, Grover Laube, K. F. Morgan, William F. Rudolph, John Seitz, Theodore Soderberg, Al Trandeau, A. G. Wise.

Digest of Preliminary Report

At almost weekly meetings since its formation, the committee has gathered and classified data useful for the development of a silent camera and has drawn up tentative specifications for the acceptability of such a camera. Noise spectrum and intensity tests are being arranged for to determine the exact properties of present extraneous noises.

Action of Council

The procedure to date was approved and the committee authorized to proceed with the program outlined.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREEN ILLUMINATION FOR STUDIO REVIEW ROOMS

Committee

Nathan Levinson, chairman.

The question of standardizing the illumination of screens in studio previewing rooms, including the correlated phase of candlepower of illumination, is the most recent to be taken under advisement by the Research Council.

STANDARDIZATION ON NON-HALATION TINT

Committee

Carl Dreher, Chairman; Emery Huse, Max Parker, Victor Milnor.

Objectives

To conduct such surveys and tests as necessary to establish the relative merits of using whites and tints. To demonstrate, if possible that the new film stocks permit satisfactory use of the actual whites for photography as the simplest and cheapest solution. To correlate the information from tests already made, and secure any further data needed.

Final Report of Committee

After considering the history and technical factors involved, the committee recommended that the use of all anti-halation chromatic finishes used as substitutes for white be discontinued. It further recommended that when a non-halating substitute for white is desired, instead of the variety of tints now used, all studios standardize upon the shade known as Pickford, or pearl gray.

Action of Council

The recommendations of the committee were approved and adopted for circulation among the studios and the membership of the Actors' Branch.

Loew's Ohio Protective Committee Asks for Stock

A recently formed protective committee of stockholders of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., Cleveland, is calling upon shareholders to deposit their stock with the committee. The action follows submission of a reorganization plan by a committee representing bondholders of Loew's Ohio and two subsidiaries, which were about to default payment of interest on securities.

Wm. Fox Is Sued By Receiver For General Theatres

United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Wilmington, Del., receiver of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., has filed suit in chancery court at Wilmington, against William Fox and All Continent Corporation for the cancellation of $2,300,000 of notes of General Theatres Equipment held by All Continent Corporation. All Continent is alleged personal holding company for William Fox.

The bill of complaint was filed on behtlf of the receiver by G. L. Ward, Jr., of the firm of Marvel, Morford, Ward and Logan of Wilmington. It sets forth that on April 5, 1930, when General Theatres acquired from William Fox control of Fox Film and Fox Theatres, a part of the agreement between Mr. Fox and General Theatres was a provision that Mr. Fox was to have a 10 per cent interest in any underwriting by General Theatres of stock of Fox Film Corporation. General Theatres also agreed to use of its best efforts, according to the complaint, to increase this 10 per cent.

Shortly after this agreement had been reached, the complaint sets forth, General Theatres acquired 1,600,000 shares of Fox Class A common, for which it paid $48,000,000. Fox, it is alleged, demanded 20 per cent participation in the 1,600,000 shares, but General Theatres denied he was entitled to more than 160,000.

A controversy ensued between General Theatres and Mr. Fox, and on June 1, 1930, Albert M. Greenfield, of Philadelphia, is said to have gone to Harley L. Clarke, president of General Theatres, and offered to intercede to effect a settlement with Fox. Greenfield was employed for this purpose, and General Theatres agreed to pay him $250,000 if the matter was settled.

Eventually the dispute between Fox and General Theatres was settled through Greenfield, Fox receiving $2,800,000 in notes of General Theatres. One of these notes was for $300,000, and petition alleges it was received by Greenfield from All-Continent, representing his 10 per cent.

General Theatres paid Mr. Greenfield his $250,000 commission, complaint states.

The complainant seeks to recover from Fox and All-Continental a voting certificate representing 108,000 shares of Fox Film Class A stock and 50,000 shares of stock of Grandeur, Inc., which were originally held by All-Continent as collateral to the General Theatres notes and were sold by it at auction, but bought in by All-Continent and are now held by it. It also seeks recovery of $200,000 paid by General Theatres in reduction of the notes, $163,699.99 paid as interest on the notes and $50,000 paid by General Theatres to the attorneys for All-Continent for services in connection with a renewal of the notes.

After the complaint was filed a restraining order was issued by Chancellor Wolcott restraining All-Continent from disposing of the notes of General Theatres held by it, and also from attempting to enforce the notes. An application has been made on behalf of the receiver for a temporary injunction, and the chancellor ordered that this application be heard on February 31.

MUSIC HALL STARTS COMBINATION POLICY AS RKO ROXY CONTINUES

Policy Decision on the Roxy Uncertain; Cabinet of Seven RKO Executives Takes Over Operation of Both Theatres

The lavish variety show which opened Radio City Music Hall two weeks ago was abandoned this week for a policy of continuous stage and screen shows at popular prices. The RKO Roxy, reported last week to be closing its doors, will continue with "The Animal Kingdom," for an indefinite period.

Beginning Wednesday, the Music Hall will open at 11 a. m. and until 1 p. m. the price will be 35 cents for all seats. On weekdays a 75-cent top will prevail, and on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays there will be a 99-cent top. Smoking is permitted on all three mezzanines. The film inaugurating the change of policy is Columbia's "The Bitter Tea of General Yen."

During the week, three members of the Radio City executive staff resigned. Robert Edmond Jones, art director, resigned on the ground that the change of policy changed entirely the conditions prevailing when he took the position. Originally it was planned that there would be one new stage show each month. Under present policy there will be one each week. Mr. Jones was succeeded by Clark Robinson. J. H. Turner, general business administrator of Radio City, also resigned, as did S. Jay Kaufman, assistant to Roxy.

Executive operation of the Music Hall and Radio City was turned over late last week to an RKO theatre cabinet headed by Harold B. Franklin, president of the RKO theatre circuit. Originally RKO was not supposed to have any operating or management authority over Roxy's two Radio City theatres. However, Mr. Franklin this week explained that the illness of Roxy is responsible for the change in the situation.

"During the illness of Roxy," said Mr. Franklin, "certain matters in connection with the theatres had to be adjusted and other immediate business carried on. A certain course of action being decided upon by M. H. Aylesworth, RKO head, the RKO theatre organization is cooperating with the Roxy organization, as it is our desire to be of all possible assistance at this time."

Roxy was understood to be ready to leave the Post Graduate Hospital in New York this week, returning to his home to recuperate from a recent operation. He is scheduled to resume his Radio City duties January 23.

The seven members of Mr. Franklin's cabinet include M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO; Martin Beck, in charge of vaudeville activities; Herschel Stuart, general manager of the circuit; Phil Reisman, in charge of film buying, and Robert F. Sisk, director of advertising and publicity. Roxy, it was said, will serve on this committee when he returns to his duties.

The recurrent rumor that Roxy had been relieved of his authority and would resign, and that the decision to make the changes in the Music Hall's policy had come after differences between Roxy and RKO officials was denied this week by Martin Beck as being "simply ridiculous."

With the opening of Rockefeller Center's two de luxe theatres, the Rockefeller family finds itself with an important stake in the amusement industry. In commenting on this situation, the Wall Street Journal said: "John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is reputed to be one of the largest stockholders in the Chase National Bank, which is the banking sponsor for Fox Film Corporation, General Theatre Equipment, which owns 1,300,000 shares of Fox, and for Film Securities which holds the 660,900 shares controlling interest in Loew's, Inc."

RKO, which has leased the two Radio City theatres, lacks an adequate supply of films for both houses, says the Journal, and Fox now lacks a Broadway show window, so that benefits might result from a combination of these companies.

HAYS PAYS TRIBUTE TO COOLIDGE MEMORY

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and long a close friend and associate of the late Calvin Coolidge, issued the following statement following the death of Mr. Coolidge:

The passing of Calvin Coolidge removes a towering human landmark from the nation he served so well. He was a great, unique figure in our public life. To those who have served with him in the crises of his national career he will always remain a symbol of Americanism that inherited the purest strain of our forefathers. He was wise in his leadership and granite in his decisions. He saw far and looked deep. His was the wisdom of one who knew the vast strength of our national moorings, whose soul was filled with indomitable faith in his country, and who had inexhaustible confidence in the fundamental integrity and sense of the common man. His memory will remain a beacon to the generations that will follow.

Mr. Hays wired the sympathy of himself and Mrs. Hays to Mrs. Coolidge when news of the former President's death reached him in New York.

RKO Offices Ready Jan. 21

Half of RKO's office space in Radio City will be ready January 14, and four other floors, completed for the picture and theatre companies, will be completed January 21. All departments will move on that date.

Replies to Suit On World Wide

Norman C. Nicholson, counsel for Educational-World Wide, issued the following statement Tuesday:

"The stockholder's action which has been brought against World Wide Pictures, Inc., a Delaware corporation, by Alexander Aronson, a stockholder owning less than 2 per cent of the outstanding shares of stock, is not regarded seriously by the individual and corporate defendants. World Wide Pictures, Inc., of Delaware, is a wholly inactive company, not having carried on any business for a period of several years, and is not to be confused with World Wide Pictures, Inc., a New York corporation, the active feature distributor affiliated with the Educational organization, which is not a defendant in the action."

Mr. Aronson participated in the formation of the old World Wide concern and filed action last Saturday through Linet and Sutton, New York attorneys. "The action will be most vigorously defended," said Saul Rogers, also of defense counsel. Executives and directors of the companies are named as co-defendants. The suit seeks an accounting from operations and charges mismanagement of World Wide affairs. Aronson asks that certain agreements between Educational and World Wide be set aside.

LeHay Suit Reverts to Arbitration in Pathe Case

Extended litigation between LeHay, Inc., operators of the Buffalo Lafayette theatre, against Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be settled by arbitration, according to Pathe executives. Arbitrators will fix the amount to be paid the exhibitor due to alleged failure of Pathe to deliver pictures contracted for before RKO Radio took over Pathe and discontinued production under the sign of the rooster.

An appeal has been filed by Pathe against the Spitzer west coast interests' suit, but as yet the appeal has not been heard.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

AT Le Mars, Iowa, lawyer Herbert S. Martin, about to foreclose a mortgage against Farmer Johnson, last week, was dragged down the court house steps by other farmers. He was bidding in the farm for less than the mortgage, leaving Johnson still in debt. To save his neck, Martin had to wire the New York Life Insurance Company for permission to raise the bid. A lawyer's life in the mortgaged farm belt is not gay.

All of which reminded Mr. Hearst's favorite editorial writer, Arthur Brisbane, about the time when Merlin Hall Aylesworth was a young lawyer, working for nothing. One day Mr. Aylesworth was protecting a Western farmer with two mortgages on his farm and one on his sheep. When the bankers told the farmer he must get out, he burst into tears. One kind-hearted banker patted him on the shoulder: "Don't cry, everything will come out all right." The farmer said: "I am not crying for myself, I am crying when I think of you bankers in the farming business."

Good-natured Kate Smith's robustness is, evidently, one of her chief resources. The other night, during her farewell-to-Hollywood broadcast, she started to liquidate when she broke down and cried at the microphone just as she was about to send that moon over the mountain. Several prominent film folk stopped in at the studio out there to wish Kate bon voyage back East. It was all very touching. Kate came back lighter but richer.

The cough-drop "orchestra" of the four Mills Brothers—John, Herbert, Harry and Don—has earned $200,000 from vaudeville, recording and motion picture work in the 15 months since the boys made their air debut.

Radio programs are just a great big headache to Eddie Buzell. Nor are they a bromo to exhibitors who find many patrons staying at home for entertainment. Between gags and grapefruit juice at Sardi's, Eddie let it be known the other post-meridian, that he is worried about the future of comedy in pictures. "This promiscuous broadcasting of the Cantors and Pearls, to say nothing of how often they hit the Marxes, can't go on if we comedians want to continue meeting our picture-customers on a cash-an-tarry basis," he said. "Pretty soon the radio-ragged audiences will be walking out on us. We'll be left holding the gags—just the old jokes at home. They'd leave, too, if they weren't too d - - old to walk. No kidding," kidded Eddie, "a gag today is a hag tomorrow . . . and that means the next ten minutes on a coast-to-coast gasworks. Keep that up for another year or two and take the consequences. Producers will be crying, 'My filmdom for a gag'."

MR. ROCKEFELLER AND HIS RKO INVESTMENT

One bright morning last week, the learned editor of Dow, Jones' WALL STREET JOURNAL received from a subscriber the following inquiry: "I understand the Rockefellers have a good interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum. If it is good enough for them, I should think it is good enough for a small investor. What do you think?"

The question was published, and so was the answer, which said, in part: "Rockefeller interest in Radio-Keith-Orpheum springs from the 100,000-share holding taken in connection with modification of RKO leases in Rockefeller Center. This was hardly a matter of voluntary investment."

The opening of Radio City's motion picture theatre received almost as much newspaper space as Music Hall, due to the untiring efforts of expert publicists.

ONE hundred enterprising merchants of Greater New York have already adopted the name, "Roxy" for their business. While the receiver for the old Roxy theatre on Seventh Avenue was vigorously fighting RKO in court for right to use the name, scores of up-and-comin' businessmen of the Metropolis were rapidly tearing down old name signs and erecting new ones.

The name "Roxy" now adorns barber shops and suspender factories; button hole plants, delicatessens, garages, kosher dairies, plumbing shops, pool rooms and beauty salons; doughnut shoppes, vegetable stands, shoe repairers and dollar cleaners. There's a Roxy Finance Company, in the Bronx, and a Roxy "Grille," on West 46th Street. The telephone directory lists all of them.

Such is fame.

Lowell Sherman, Paramount director, hired a "pickpocket" as a practical joke, to pilfer articles from the pockets of players working in Paramount's "She Done Him Wrong." Disguised as an extra, he successfully created a small panic. Sherman had his little laugh, the valuables were returned and he paid off his conspirator. An hour later he discovered his own watch was gone.

Hollywood has only just heard the yarn about the motion picture actor who is SO popular that at least three companies are after him—gas, electric and telephone.

When the Radio City Music Hall opening approached there was a rush for seats and frantic pressure, among other places, on the offices of a New York official of RKO. And seats were rare indeed. None were free, each subsidiary or vested corporation and department being solemnly required to purchase them by requisition.

The executive was not to be caught short twice. He placed a very large order indeed, for the RKO Roxy picture house opening, in behalf of his department. But, lo, there was no demand. Caught long, he called in employees, one by one, and in the strictest confidence "fixed 'em up" for the big show.

But the seats were enbloc—so there was a home office section at the big show. The confidences were seated side by side all in a row.

WHEN the annual winter meeting on the border track of Agua Caliente opened the other week, again sponsored by interests headed by Joseph M. Schenck, a new betting scheme was launched to lure Hollywoodites and others down to the Mexican oval. It is called "Seven Straight," and was supposed to have been explained by Mr. Schenck to Eddie Cochrane, sports writer, who describes it thusly:

The player will endeavor to pick seven straight winners in a single afternoon. The Agua Caliente Jockey Club will pay $5,000 in cash to each successful picker. The player makes out a special ticket which he buys at the cost of an ordinary mutuel ticket. If no one sweeps the card on any one day the $5,000 is added to the prize on the following day. Thus, in a few days, the pool may total $20,000 or $30,000, or more, continually mounting until someone picks seven straight.

If, one week before the meeting closes, on March 19, a large pool remains, the money will be awarded in the following manner: If the pool totals, for instance, $210,000, it will be split seven ways, $30,000 for each race. Then, each $30,000 will be subdivided three ways—straight, place and show.

Glass used in studio and theatre lamps is supposed to be uniformly free from disfigurations. To obtain such glass, sand which is 99.7% pure must be utilized. Even sand which is good enough for high-grade plate glass is not good enough for these lamps. In the place where sandstone of the proper purity can be obtained, the rock is quarried and crushed, eliminating at the source the incidental impurities always present in native loose sand. This sand is shipped to the glass works of the manufacturer in specially constructed white-painted tank cars, as carefully guarded against dust and other contamination as a shipment of milk.

We learned the other day where Martin Beck got his idea for turning unprofitable theatres into 3.2 per cent beer gardens. It seems that many years ago, Mr. Beck, an RKO circuit executive, met up with the owner of a saloon on North Clark Street, Chicago. After having been an actor on the German stage in the Deutsch neighborhoods of New York, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee and San Francisco, Mr. Beck conceived the idea of mixing beer and beauty. And so he built a platform in his friend's saloon on which he presented comedians and soubrettes. With the aid of William Passpart, now European representative for RKO, Beck engaged artists, and, aided by the sale of beer and other drinks, made a lot of money. Evidently Mr. Beck remembers the good old days.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Grand Slam

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy

A satirical burlesque on the greatest of indoor sports—Bridge, and all its trappings. And like another recent Warner Brothers' picture, "Hard to Handle," it spontaneously suggests its own inherent showmanship. Comedy is there from the time the show really gets under way; apparently no laugh provoking possibility has been overlooked. Even the usually staid Paul Lukas has been transformed into a comedian.

The start, which is a little slow and foreign to the basic theme, portrays a waiter-musician in a New York Russian cafe, Peter Stanislavsky, whose ambition is to become the author of erudite tomes. Marrying Marcia, he is inveigled into playing Bridge, a game which he always has considered childishly simple and silly. Systems mean nothing to him; he bids "seven spades" regardless.

Sent to a Park Avenue apartment as a waiter, he is induced by Lola, who has a suppressed yen for him, into becoming a "fourth." His opponent is the noted Van Dorn, author of a fool-proof system, who goes down to spectacular and laughable defeat before the "seven spades" onslaught. Overnight, he becomes a sensation. Glaring headlines welcome the new pasteboard genius. They make Peter and his wife "America's Bridge Sweethearts." Phillip ghost-writes "The Stanislavsky System," which readily shows how a husband and wife can be partners at bridge without a family brawl resulting.

A nationwide tour, ballyhooed to the skies, follows. In the climax the Bridge Sweetheart's romance blows up and Phillip adds the crowning touch by exposing the whole thing as a fraud.

Then the real fun begins. Determined to rehabilitate himself, Peter propositions Van Dorn, who after all is only an ex-Indian chief medicine-show man, to a championship tournament, which is nothing but a gigantic burlesque on the famous Culbertson-Lenz epic. Broadcast by Roscoe Karns in the manner of a championship prize fight or a world's series ball game, the ballyhooed battle is on. Industry stops, airplanes pause in midair, speeding trains stop in their tracks, even the breaking waves stand still, and gangsters forget their rackets as Peter takes a terrific trouncing.

With Phillip, Marcia listens in on the debacle as Peter's partners desert him. When things look blackest, she rushes to him and with the old "seven spades" system working again, they annihilate Van Dorn.

Then for a climax is a bewhiskered blackout, so cleverly used that your audiences should leave the theatre shaking with laughter.

The punch of satirical realism appears to be the picture's greatest value. In its short running time it is full of entertainment and natural showmanship. Everything from trick teaser gags, easily and inexpensively possible, through the use of ordinary playing cards, up to local championship Bridge tournaments promoted in your theatre, with the finals coming simultaneously with your playdates is strictly in order, burlesquing the Culbertson, Lenz or Work Bridge systems.

"Grand Slam" should prove clever entertainment for the whole family.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Based on the novel by B. Russell Herts. Screen play by David Boehm and Erwin Gelsey. Directed by William Dieterle. Photography by Sid Hickox. Film editor, Jack Killifer. Dialogue director, Arthur Greville Collins. Art director, Jack Okey. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Release date, undetermined. Running time, 65 minutes.

Hello Everybody

(Paramount)

Kate Smith

For audience interesting purposes, "Hello Everybody" is all Kate Smith, and, considering the popularity which her radio broadcasting has won for her, it should be enough to insure its box office results. The story, which is really divided into two parts, has for its main objective the creation of sympathy and admiration for the central character.

The first part portrays Kate as a hardworking farm girl, who is considered by her neighbors as the leader in their fight to prevent the power company from buying up the rights in their valley. Losing the first skirmish, after they have put up their life's savings, Kate pledges herself to see them through and as the result of a broadcast she has made on a "good-will" program, sponsored by the power company, she receives an invitation to sing for a big national chain. But not until the higher courts confirm the first decision does Kate embark for New York to become an instantaneous radio luminary.

The second part, in New York, is gayly musical with Kate presenting songs in pleasing fashion and her life surrounded by all the color and glamor of a national favorite. In this part of the picture appears something that will permit unusual advertising. Those familiar with the Smithian proportions will be surprised to see her dancing. But she does, a snappy number, that brought a salvo of applause from the preview audience.

Finally Kate is back home with a contract that enables her to cooperate with the power company and build a dam in a spot that will not affect the homes of her neighbors and herself.

While that story may not hold a terrific appeal to urban audiences, her screen work amply proves that she has a picture personality and strong atmospheric plugging of Miss Smith as a great radio star should be the angle to excite their interest. In the rural areas, a combination of her name with the theme of the story should have a powerful appeal.

The show is good family entertainment, Kate being pictured as a self-sacrificing soul. There is also a neat little romance between her sister, Sally Blane, and Randolph Scott, and a topical line of "rural" comedy supplied by Charles Grapewin.

That every possible radio and music tieup should be exercised in connection with this picture should be understood. The advance campaign, particularly in the country districts, should be heavier than usual. Concentrate on the name Kate Smith and make the most of the song numbers.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by William Seiter. From a story by Fannie Hurst. Screen play by Dorothy Yost and Lawrence Hazard. Music and lyrics by Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow. Photographed by Gilbert Warrington. To be released in March. Running time, 70 minutes.

The Intruder

(Allied)

Mystery Thriller

There is so much thrill mystery and terror in "The Intruder" that handling it in the usual way may not create the desired reaction among patrons. As the show is exaggerated, so should the idea of your campaign be made novel. Try to get over the idea that it is more thrilling than any super-thriller of the past; that it has a different brand of terror than anyone ever conceived before; that its mystery would puzzle the greatest of detectives, either screen or real; that its melodrama is of a different and more powerfully interesting sort, and cap the whole line with the news that instead of scaring them it will hand them more good laughter than many a comedy. You won't have to burlesque the picture to do this.

The picture has been well worked out. The players occupy their respective roles in a manner that should be satisfactory to all. The running time is short and action and suspense have been packed into it.

Proper handling will make the picture suitable for both adult and juvenile consumption.

Possessing plenty of entertainment value in its own right, it is also a picture that will permit exhibitors to indulge in much unusual interest-creating showmanship. In the first place it's a thrill mystery melodrama, and that fact, coming at a time when the public is pretty well sated with that type of entertainment, makes it necessary to surround it with a different atmosphere.

Starting with a storm at sea, the yarn runs through a whole series of excitement-provoking episodes. There's a murder, followed by an inquisition in which a self acclaimed detective usurps the Captain's authority, precedes a shipwreck; a landing on a desert island, where the little party is terrorized by all sorts of weird jungle noises; the discovery of a group of skeletons in a cave; the accusing of Brandt of the murder; another murder, this time with the Captain and the two girls driven into the jungle by the killer; a fanatical Wild Man; the saving of the girls and the capture of the second murderer; rescue by a passing liner and the surprise climax.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Distributed by Allied Pictures. Directed by Albert Ray. Story and screen play by Frances Hyland. Photographed by Harry Neumann and Tom Galligan.

Men and Jobs

(Amkino)

Drama

Coming from the producing company of Russia, Suyoskino, and released in this country by its agent, Amkino, "Men and Jobs," attempting a dramatic story, is at the same time undeniably propaganda for the Russian cause and more specifically for the Soviet five-year industrial plan.

Russian dialogue is used throughout, with superimposed translations into English to aid the American audience. Indicated is the manner in which the Russians, in their attempt to solve the problem of the technical methods with which they are unfamiliar, have adopted the teachings of an American engineer, aiding as a consultant.

In an effort to impart to the picture something of a story form, there has been evolved the narrative of the Russian section foreman on the large construction job, who is taught by the American engineer the inefficiency of his methods and profits by the teaching to the extent of running an even race with the American in completing a portion of the job. The antagonism which the Russian had early felt for the American's blunt criticism, turns to friendship at the end. An incidental romance is again part of the attempt to overlay the propaganda.

Except as a picture of the manner in which the Russians are attemtping to conquer that field of which they knew very little, the film has comparatively little marketing possibilities in this country. It might be run as a novelty, but there could be no promises of anything except exactly what is offered. The type and subject of the picture would seem to dictate its exhibition rather exclusively in those houses in the large metropolitan centers which make a practice of using foreign product.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Soyuzkino. Distributed by Amkino. Directed by A. Macharet. Photographed by A. Galperin. Release date, January 1, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

The Unwritten Law

(Majestic)

Drama

There is moderate entertainment in this independent production, with a bit of novelty imparted to the story in the form of mystery and a smattering of the inside of the motion picture studio at work. The names are reasonably good, the performances satisfactory.

Greta Nissen, foreign-accented blonde; Skeets Gallagher, as the noisy press agent at the studio; Mary Brian, Louise Fazenda, Lew Cody, Purnell Pratt, Hedda Hopper, are all substantial names, with marquee possibilities best left to the judgment of the individual exhibitor according to what he knows his patronage likes.

Cody is the picture company boss who has cast Miss Nissen aside and plans to make Miss Brian a star. Pratt arrives as the high-priced novelist to write stories for her. Cody asks Miss Brian to marry him against the protest and warning of Theodore Von Eltz, the director, in love with Miss Brian, and of Miss Brian's mother, Miss Hopper. Suddenly it is revealed that there is a tragic, strange past, involving Miss Hopper, Pratt, Cody; that Cody stole Pratt's wife, who is Miss Brian's mother. On location aboard ship, Pratt, through the recounting of a story he claims to have in mind, reveals that he plans to kill Cody, a plan real only to the people involved, and the audience.

The exhibitor may capitalize on the mystery element, the behind-the-scene motion picture studio atmosphere, the mother-love thought, which leads the mother to commit murder and kill herself, rather than permit her daughter to marry the man who had ruined her life. There is a certain triteness in the revelation that Pratt is the father of Miss Brian, that Pratt finally finds Cody after a search of 19 years, consequently it would perhaps be better to give little attention to this angle, concentrating on the more novel aspects of the story. There is a certain amount of entertainment in the picture, but considerable work on the part of the exhibitor is required, since there is little outstanding "natural draw" in the film. It is obviously adult material.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Majestic. Directed by Christy Cabanne. Story by John Krafft. Screen play by Edmund T. Lowe. Photographed by Ira Morgan. Recording engineer, Earl Crain. Film editor, Otis Garrett. Release date, November 15, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Deception

(Columbia)

Drama

The punch and fast action of the wrestling arena serve to make this film at least in a measure entertaining. It is a story of the crookedness of the wrestling game, as it is promoted by accented Leo Carrillo, probably remembered for his gangster roles in the past. The manner in which a college football hero is framed into the game by offers of fat contracts, eventually discovers what has happened and finally wins the world's championship despite Carrillo, thereby smashing the crooked ring, forms the plot.

The picture falls into the class of program fare, as to story, performance and execution. It is brought above the mediocre, however, by reason of the wrestling sequences, in which the players "do their stuff" with plenty of vigor, giving the bouts all the appearance of reality. One fight provides a measure of comedy with the amusing falls and tackles of the contestants.

The exhibitor may sell the idea of an expose of the wrestling crookedness which has long been a factor in the sporting world. Indicated are the methods employed by the promoter in "fixing" bouts to give the fans a good show. The cast offers Leo Carrillo, Thelma Todd, Barbara Weeks, Nat Pendleton, Henry Armetta for comedy and little Dickie Moore as marquee possibilities. The popularity of Carrillo a short while ago should still carry over sufficiently to make his name worth something in selling.

Carrillo, finding his receipts dwindling, contracts Pendleton, builds him up by permitting him to win all bouts, without his knowing it. When the promoter finds his girl, Miss Todd, paying too much attention to the wrestler, Carrillo orders the champion to "give him the works." Ready to quit, Pendleton learns the truth, and Miss Weeks, his fiancee, urges him to attempt a comeback. Under the tutelage of an old wrestler, Pendleton learns the game, wrangles a return match from Carrillo as the "masked marvel," and wins the championship despite the effort of Carrillo to stop him when he realizes Pendleton is wrestling to win. The bout is a fast action climax which has all the furious battle of the real thing.

The women in the audience may not take too kindly to the brutality of the wrestling, consequently use of the romance angle and the comeback implication in the story may serve to bring them in. For the masculine portion of the patronage, indicate action, punch and plenty of real wrestling to set them up in their seats. As a regular run picture, it has entertainment possibilities.—Aaronson, New York.

Old New York

Good

One of the "Do You Remember?" series, in which the library is tapped for pictures of New York in the nineties and thereabouts. It is of course amusing to see the big town in the day of mutton-leg feminine sleeves, top hats and tail coats, and feathered bonnets atop the "rat" of milady. The narrative, rendered by Lew Lehr, is meant to be amusing and succeeds quite well, although verging on the painful at odd moments. Subject has general appeal. Running time, 10 minutes.

Firehouse Honeymoon

(RKO Radio)

Amusing

An amusing comedy situation is presented when Harry Sweet and his new bride can find no room at the hotel and are invited by a friend to spend their time at the firehouse. Harry sees very little of his wife as the firemen take possession of her, then both are dressed as firemen to fool the suddenly arriving chief. They finally find a hotel room, but the firemen break in with hose and ax.—Running time, 18 minutes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Waco, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

There may be better towns in Texas than Waco, but for the size of it we doubt it. Waco has seven theatres, and like other towns it has too many, but that's Waco's business. Our judgment would be that four would be aplenty. We met two very delightful people here in Waco, Mr. T. D. Whitehorn, who is the special investigator for the Griffith circuit in Oklahoma, and the Paschall circuit here in Texas, and Mr. J. P. Harrison, manager for the Paschall theatres in Waco.

If there was anything in connection with the motion picture business that we failed to discuss it was because the matter was overlooked. We don't know whether they thought we knew anything about it or not, but they asked us some leading questions, one being our judgment as to the greatest menace to the business today and, we answered it in one word, "Radio." We expected this to start an argument, but it didn't, they both agreed with us.

Then we said that the next greatest menace would be the return of beer, and they agreed with that also, which proves that three great minds run in the same channel, but which will cause a host of people to say, "Those guys are crazy."

In a recent issue of the HERALD, Uncle Carl Laemmle made a statement with reference to the return of the saloon that this industry would do well to take cognizance of. The argument that the return of beer will bring prosperity to the country is an argument that we can't savvy.

We'll know full well good times are here
When Pa comes home chock full of beer
And has a glorious time.
He'll neglect to bring the kids some shoes
But he'll come home lit up with booze
And that will just be fine.

We found W. H. Cluck of the Beltonian theatre at Belton just recovering from a severe attack of "flu." He looked it, in fact his proper place was in bed, although he was keeping pretty close to the house and not very far from the bed. He has the only theatre in a town of about five thousand and he ought to be doing a nice business. We judge he is, for he impressed us as a swell theatre manager.

C. J. Stevens has a unique theatre front in his Little theatre at Temple. It is built up with rustic rocks and impresses one as the entrance to a cave rather than a theatre. It is very pretty and the novelty is quite striking. He has promised to send Chick Lewis a picture of it for his "Round Table" department. Mr. Stevens has also built two very nice bungalows, out of the same material, which are the show places of Temple and make one feel that he wants to move right down there and occupy one of them. He's been out of the HERALD family altogether too long, but he is in now.

Dallas

George W. Spence operates the Dixie theatre for the R. & R. circuit at Waxahachie. (What a name for a town. Good gosh, it's no wonder there isn't a Republican in the town). And George said he was going to send us a subscription to the HERALD. He'll do it, because there's a guy you can depend upon. He has his eye on every phase of the business and we judge that R. & R. picked a winner in that boy.

We saw a sign across a building here in Dallas today which read, "REPUBLICAN HEADQUARTERS." We wouldn't be any more surprised to see a sign on Pike's Peak reading "ATLANTIC OCEAN." From the way the boys turned out on last election day we didn't suppose there was a Republican in the state, at any rate they didn't count very many of 'em.

We have had the pleasure again of meeting our very dear friend, Wallace Walthall, brother of our oldtime shooting companion, Henry B.

Mr. Walthall is the southern representative of National Screen Service and he covers Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and part of Alabama and Tennessee and a part of New Mexico, and that's a lot of territory if you ask us. Everywhere we go we hear theatremen speak in the very highest term of Mr. Walthall. There are but few men, if any,in the business that we know of who rate as high in the estimation of theatremen as he, and that's a mighty valuable asset to the National Screen Service company. Not only that, but he's a valuable asset to the entire motion picture industry. It's a pleasure to know such men as Wallace Walthall. We are mighty glad we do.

Ed Wilson is the manager for the True Film Company and he operates three colored shows here in Dallas. Ed is a snappy, up-to-the-minute kind of a boy who doesn't wait for business to come, but he goes out and gets it. That's why those three shows are still operating full time and why Ed has sowbelly and beans in the cupboard all the while. You won't catch that boy going hungry, not as long as the colored population can mortgage their shirts.

We are telling you again that we'll never be satisfied until they put Kate Smith and that Street Singer on the screen in some oldtime song like "Swanee River," "On the Banks of the Brandywine," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" and other songs of that nature.

There's no darn sense in their depriving the public of this pleasure any longer. We have heard this cross-eyed, cross-legged shanty Nigger jazz so much that we'd relish an opportunity to hit grandma on the head with an axe. It would really give us pleasure, notwithstanding we have a lamb-like disposition.

The sun has tried its best to shine
Upon this Lone Star state.
But it never gets out quite in time
It's always just too late.

For the clouds will overcast the sky
And it's easy to foretell,
That when the clouds go sweeping by
It's sure to rainlikehel.

There are several more verses of this, but that'll be aplenty.

STARRING

MONTE BLUE

with LILA LEE

Seena Owen, Charles Delaney, Robert Ellis, Florence Roberts, Mickey McGuire, Jackie Searle

M. P. HERALD:

"A feature that includes drama, romance, tinges of human interest, comedy, more than the usual amount of suspense and quite a bit of thrilling action. A piece of entertainment distinctly of the family type."

VARIETY:

"Allied has handed the Monte Blue pictures better all around production. It's good kid fare, as well as adult, with Mickey McGuire and Jackie Searle, and the action built around them, giving the juve touch."

ASSOCIATED PUBLICATIONS:

"The Hoffmans came through with an entertaining opus that contains all the box-office elements. Thrills, action, suspense and human interest are deftly woven into the footage and it should satisfy the pasteboard purchasers in any section."

FILMOGRAPH:

"Monte Blue is immense in 'Officer 13'; Allied strikes happy note in entertainment for whole family. It is the wholesome drama of this sort, with a moral, that carries B. O. value."

HOLLYWOOD SCREEN WORLD:

"This Monte Blue production is ace-high as entertainment and the Monte Blue fans and exhibitors are going to like it."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

LOCAL BAD MAN: Hoot Gibson—This is the second Hoot I have used. I rather hesitated about buying them, but have been pleasantly surprised. They are as good (better than most) as any of the cowboy dramas. Business was very satisfactory, above expectations, and the recording was as good as any I have had. Mighty glad that I have some more of these coming up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

Columbia

CORNERED: Tim McCoy—Meant nothing at all in my town and the picture is good, but McCoy did not draw them in. Seems that Jones and Mix are the Western bets.—O. A. Wodke, Nebel Amusement Company, Majestic Theatre, Lake Mills, Wis.

DECEPTION: Leo Carillo, Barbara Weeks—Nice little entertainment for week-ends.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—Good, fast action auto racing story that will please kids and action fans. Played, Dec. 24.—P. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt, Lillian Miles—Good program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—Without any great "hurrah" and advance "bush-wah" on the part of the publicity department, Columbia gave us the best Christmas present of the whole bunch. Everyone liked this, and said so. You won't go wrong on this one, even tho' it's not heralded as a world-beater. Played Jan. 1.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—A great picture. One of the best entertainments we have had in a long time. The star is great and the story too true. Played Dec. 18-19.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—One of the best westerns we have played. None of them have anything on Buck Jones in western features. Played Dec. 24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthlemess—I rate this picture as excellent, here in the South at any rate, for the reason that everyone who has seen it tells their friends to be sure not to miss it if they have the opportunity to see it. Drew big business for us, and pleased 'em. Played Dec. 29-30.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CROONER: David Manners—The few who turned out to see this production enjoyed it. My patrons are crying for music, and I cannot understand why the producers do not make more pictures with singing and music. This was overdone when talkies got started, but there's not enough of it at present. Played Oct. 14-15.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

DOCTOR X: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—A very good entertainment. Great coloring and a splendid cast. Played Dec. 22-23.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young—You will be surprised on the amount of business you will do with this picture. First of all, use Warner's own trailer on this attraction, and then advertise "no children admitted under 14." As to the picture; it is good, but does not follow what the title might imply closely enough. Played two days to excellent business, especially the first night.—Nebel Amusement Company, New Majestic Theatre, Lake Mills, Wis.

MISS PINKERTON: Joan Blondell—A fine mystery picture. Gave good satisfaction. Star is very clever. Played Dec. 20-21.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Did a nice business on this picture. Just the kind of a production my patrons will break away from their radios for, and I wish I could get more of them. My patrons want something to laugh at, something that will make them forget their troubles, and when Joe opens his mouth, it's the start of one big long laugh. Played Oct. 28-29.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—An excellent Friday and Saturday picture that will exceed your average box-office receipts on these days. By all means, use Warner's trailer on this picture. It will sell, and get them in.—O. A. Wodke, Nebel Amusement Company, Majestic Theatre, Lake Mills, Wis.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—A good picture, but hardly up to standard previously set by this well-liked star. Swimming scenes grew tiresome, and not enough comedy. Drew a nice business following Christmas. Played Dec. 26-27. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Fox

BACHELOR AFFAIRS: Adolph Menjou—A fair picture, but it isn't the kind our patrons like, and did not draw. I would say it is not a small town production. Played Nov. 15-16.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Big draw the first night, the second night not so good.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Clara stages a good comeback. Picture O. K.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Clara is back as her old self again—only better than ever. Patrons remarked it was better than they expected. Personally, I thought that they should have picked a better story for her, and I trust the next one will be good because the public are expecting it to be good. If it is not, it will be back to the ranch for Clara as far as the public are concerned. "Call Her Savage" is by Tiffany Thayer, and this smutty stuff of his "has done had its day." The public have gone clean-minded now, and I hope the producers will realize this fact within the next few years. Your patrons will like this picture because it is Clara, and not on account of the sordid story.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Irene Ware—Well produced mystery picture with Egyptian locale. Will please any type audience. Clean and interest holding.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—A good picture of its kind, but not box-office here. "The Magician" describes the type of picture. Had no kicks, and a few compliments.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

CHARLEY CHAN'S CHANCE: Warner Oland—Did not go over very big. I advertised it, and figured this Chan story would draw above average, but it did not seem to make a hit with my patrons as business was below average. Played Oct. 21-22.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: Taken by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—My patrons pronounced it the best, the most entertaining, the most instructive, and the most genuine in appearance of all the animal pictures to date. Did not do as well, however, at the box-office, as some of the others that had more national publicity behind them.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—While the story is not remarkable for its originality, you can always depend upon Bill for his homely wit and philosophy to put a picture over. I don't like to say it of an old trouper like Irene Rich, but she is showing her age, and it was very apparent in the close-ups.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Fine and dandy. This team (Farrell and Gaynor) always draws and pleases. Step on your ads.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—A splendid picture. Story and acting very good. Gave satisfaction. Played Dec. 31.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: Very good Zane Grey story. Weed-end.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Make a special effort to get all the kids out to see this one. It's a great treat for them and the grown-ups will enjoy it also. Boots Mallory looks very good in her first picture, but patrons seemed to miss the James Dunn-Sally Eilers combination. Fox should co-star those two. Played Dec. 28.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers—Very pleasing picture which drew better the second night than the first. My patrons like this type of entertainment. Played Dec. 27-28.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy—Nice little program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Very good picture which pleased all who saw it. Under good conditions it should draw well. Played Dec. 26.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Funny burlesque on the football business they claim is a "racket," and it certainly is in this picture. Good entertainment. Played Dec. 22-28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—Terrible flop at receipts. Just another case of re-made pictures that do not draw for us, and these "nicey" nice and sweet stories seem to appeal to the children and a few older folks, but not to the younger couples. Played Dec. 15-17. Running time, 75 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—English dialogue. If you want that kind of pictures, this one is fair. Played Dec. 20.—Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—Good mystery story for mid-week.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Excellent entertainment. Drew extra business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell—One of the most entertaining pictures in months. Better than 75 per cent of the socalled "specials." Received more favorable comment than any picture in a long time. Everyone wants to see more of the stage coach driver and accomplished liar. Someone did his best to kill it with the title, but it was so good that it drew after the first day in spite of this.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN ROOM 13: Elissa Landi, Neil Hamilton—they sure didn't come out to see this, and it's a good drama too, but this star is no draw, and means nothing to our people. Just another movie—that's all. Played Dec. 13-14. Running time, 67 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Ralph Bellamy—This is an old picture, but it should be shown in every theatre, large and small. I ran it for a football benefit, so we had a big turnout. It's the kind of a picture that makes you swell out your chest when the patrons come out telling you how much they enjoyed the picture. We should have more like it. Played Nov. 1-2.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Metro called it a "special." What the patrons called it, was something else. Poorest three-day run we ever had.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Suburban patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—Another that should never have been released, which goes to show that even the smart producers sometimes don't know what it is all about. This picture is not worth running. No wonder the reports are that Miss Bankhead is discouraged and is giving Hollywood the runaround.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—Clara Bow isn't the only one to stage a come-back. Bill Haines comes back in one of his old time smartaleck parts, and pleased a nice Saturday night crowd. I would call this his best 1932 picture. Patrons are crying for action, and this picture is simply packed with it. Played Dec. 31. Running time, 85 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans, Cliff Edwards, Conrad Nagel—Better than average program picture. Metro-Goldwyn should give us some more with Cliff Edwards prominently cast. Patrons crave this kind of entertainment. Action, comedy. Played Dec. 24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—A real, snappy, and most satisfying piece of entertainment. Draw not so hot, as Haines doesn't seem to click with the masses. However, this is one sweet, entertaining picture. Played Dec. 27-28.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—I was afraid of this picture, but it was very much appreciated here. Drew extra business, and is a great picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—A real Laurel and Hardy comedy. Suitable most any time.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theare, Hartington, Neb.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—Will please Laurel and Hardy fans 100 per cent. Something doing every minute and not tiresome as some of their 2-reelers where they take 500 feet of film to get untangled. Played Dec. 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Pleased about 50-50. Young set liked it, older folks frowned on it. Good entertainment. Did 'way above regular business on account of holiday. Miss Harlow exceptionally good in part she portrayed. Played Dec. 25-26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—Wonderful. It drew better than anything we have played in many a day. Many people talked about it on the way out. Liked by all classes. Played Jan. 1-2.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—Why, oh, why, do they waste good stars, time and money on this type of story? Very dissatisfactory from audience standpoint, and much more so from the box-office. Had many walkouts on this one, and no wonder—too draggy, and nothing to hold interest. Come on, Metro! Make a new resolution for the New Year! Played Jan. 2-3.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton—Nothing to it, not even a good laugh. Patrons sadly disappointed in this and not slow in telling you about it.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Marmarth and Bowman, N. D.

Monogram

BROADWAY TO CHEYENNE: Rex Bell—Plenty of action. Pleased most everyone. Good Saturday picture. Nothing extra. Business about as usual. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Dec. 24.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

SHIPS OF HATE: Lloyd Hughes, Dorothy Sebastian—We thought "Western Limited" bad, but this one was worse. Such pictures as these would close up your show in a few days. We do not like to knock any producer, but in justice to our fellow exhibitors who are struggling along for existence, we make these reports. Monogram will have to improve, especially in their recording. We have no trouble with any other pictures.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden, Theatre, Canton, Ill.

THE WESTERN LIMITED: The worst recorded picture we have run in 2 years; added a very poor story and cast.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Lelia Hyam, radio stars—This went over fine. Seemed to please all. A few remarked that it was silly, referring to Erwin's part. My people are just off of him. Radio part thoroughly enjoyed by all. Better than average business. Played Dec. 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—This is probably the best she has done since "Morocco." She has an able cast behind her, and she certainly has that something that pleases the women mostly. The picture was well liked but with conditions as they are today in the rural districts, it did but average business, which means about forty per cent down from the happy days of 1929.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Fredric March—An old one that I used several months ago. Didn't move a finger to get any business on this as I had seen it in another house and thought it best not to tell the world about it. This rather unwanted "child" gave me my best Saturday in two years, and the second best gross of the year. Why can't we get fooled like this a little oftener?—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza, Chas. Ruggles—For some reason this picture missed fire. Whether it was the "Count" stuff or the paucity of action, I don't know. Purely a romance; not too much comedy, and again too much dialogue. A hard picture to get them in on. Hence it failed at the box-office. Played Jan. 1-2.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin—It's a shame to kill a good character actor by featuring him, Erwin is mighty good if brought in once in a while during the picture like Durante, Pitts, and others, but he's tiresome in the lead and I had plenty tell me so. One can get too much of a good thing. Played Dec. 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—To relieve the unemployment situation, Paramount gave all their stars a job in this one. In addition to the stars they gave nine directors and ten scenario writers a job. Nice of Paramount to help the boys out just before Christmas, but somehow, they failed to give us a very good picture. Hardly any comedy to it. Played Dec. 29-30. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All-star—Very interesting, shows how various persons would react to an inheritance. The last episode is the best of all. It's a knockout! Played Dec. 18-19. Running time, 85 minutes.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft, Miriam Hopkins.—Business very poor on this, partly due to adverse weather conditions. With the possible exception of "Broken Lullaby," I think this is the best picture Paramount made in '32. Comment was fine on this. Will bring it back on a bargain night and make them take it.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft, Wynne Gibson—A good small town picture. Will please all classes. Played Dec. 15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney—Nothing to brag about. Nice work by stars, and direction good, but people expected some singing and more and better music. Not the type of story that draws at the B.O., and no benefit to patrons who see it first. Too bad they didn't spend a little extra dough, and Technicolor some of these scenes. Played Dec. 29-30.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marion Nixon—Clean entertainment that pleased young and old. Action, comedy and romance nicely interspersed. Played Jan. 1-2.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Used this for my Xmas attraction and was disappointed in the business but not in the show which is great entertainment. Lloyd must be the "Forgotten Man." Picture is almost perfect for a family show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Other exhibitors correct when they say that Lloyd pictures are too far apart, and that he has lost his drawing power. I call this a very good comedy, and it ought to please anyone who likes comedy, but people have forgotten him, or do not care to see him. Drew no business here. Played Dec. 25.—P. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wisc. Rural patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings, Wynne Gibson—Good program picture. Patrons seemed to enjoy it. Played Dec. 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Charles Ruggles, Dorothy Jordan.—Used this as a benefit in cooperation with athletic association of high school. Pleased. Is clean and thrilling, even for those who care nothing for football, the mystery and detective angle filling in nicely, also. Played Dec. 29-30.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parket, S. D. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Kay Francis, Herbert Marshall—Failed to do any business with this one. Picture not well-liked, and had several walk-outs on it. Herbert Marshall may be a swell actor, but so far he hasn't shown us very much. He looks like he had just returned from a funeral. Played Dec. 14. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—Little better than average program, and we made a mistake by running it on family nights—should have had on feature nights. Several "family nighters" left on it. Direction and acting wonderful. A different kind of a crook story, class throughout. Played Dec. 20-21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis—A highly sophisticated picture, but if you can get them in, they will like it, although it is another that is all dialogue and depends on that only. This is not so good in the small towns for we have very few sophisticates, and we find that pictures which have some action to go with the dialogue have a better chance of drawing the small town clientele. Running time, 84 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

RKO-Radio

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge—Notice a few rather adverse reports on this. In my small burg this went over great. Caused a lot of favorable comment. A spicy one like this goes over well once in a while. Recommend "not for kids," and play in middle of week.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Joel McCrea, Dolores Del Rio—This one gave satisfaction. You will find it will draw them on the second night showing. Good recording and good music from start to finish.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Frank Buck—Some very unusual shots in this one but did not get me any money due to the bad prints I had been getting from the Memphis exchange. Had to give them their money back on "What Price Hollywood" due to the condition of the print.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—A real honest-to-goodness picture, and one every exhibitor should show. Everyone was satisfied, and the show drew extra business. The depression doesn't look half so bad after seeing this. Played Dec. 29-31. Running time, 84 minutes—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

GIRL CRAZY: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—Played this some time ago. It is O.K. in every way. Am reporting it because, without any extra advertising, it was my fourth best box-office picture in 1932.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Dix is good in this, but the story does not interest or please women at all, and so I got a lot of knocks on a poor show. Good of its kind, but the rough and brutal stuff only makes the women talk about a poor show. Played Dec. 29.—P. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wisc. Rural patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—No draw. Parts of it very funny, but just couldn't get them interested in it. Believe they have been away from the screen a little too long. They should make at least four a year to keep up their popularity, and should have music and dancing. These are comments from my regular patrons. Played Dec. 8-10. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler, Roert Woolsey—The best thing in a funny football picture. These two comedy "nuts" always make good in this town. Tickled and satisfied everyone. Played Dec. 29-30. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

IS MY FACE RED?: Ricardo Cortez, Helen Twelvetrees—A pleasing picture, and real entertainment. Ricardo wonderful in this, and a great favorite. —Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatres, Marmarth and Bowman, N. D.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, Buster Phelps—Splendid picture for old and young, with Mitzi doing the best work of her career according to our patrons. Buster Phelps nearly steals the picture at that. Smartest boy star in the business, for his age. Played Dec. 25-26.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Drew a lot of children, but they came alone—without their parents This has always been our experience with these really "children" movies, but we keep on running them for we know these children are adults for us by and by, and just take our loss temporarily in order to maintain our standard of having "family shows" if possible, and to please the most of all classes that we draw from. Played, Dec. 23-24. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Fine entertainment. 100% satisfaction. Star and whole cast splendid. Played Dec. 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LOST SQUADRON: Richard Dix—Another old one that is worthy of mention as it grossed $20 more than any other picture I used in 1932. Good story that will please almost everyone.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea, Fay Wray—A thrilling picture, good for Friday and Saturday, with exceptionally clear recording. Story is a little far-fetched, but it is the stuff that pulls what little business there is in the small towns.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene, Betty Furness—Entertaining out-of-door picture, with comedy and action. Played Dec. 31.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix—Lots of action and suspense. Went over O.K.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix—With plenty of thrills and suspense this picture pleased my patrons. Richard Dix seems to be quite a favorite with my people, and he always draws a few extra patrons. If you want a thrilling war picture, book this. Played Oct. 17-18.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—They will have to give Constance something better to work on or she will be ruined. Fair entertainment.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—Very good. Joel McCrea and Paul Lukas in the cast, but it's a woman's picture. Played Dec. 20-22. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwill Andre, Frank Morgan—Very good week-end picture. —R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

THE SPORT PARADE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh—A few shots of all kings of sport, weak story and winds up with a wrestling match that is good. Could have been in one reel, as the wrestling match was only redeeming feature. Lots of film wasted in this.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatres, Marmarth and Bowman, N. D.

STATE'S ATTORNEY: John Barrymore—A very good picture, but it did not draw any more than the usual run of patronage. In fair times this picture would have drawn a big attendance. No money in the community, so it is hard to get them in. Played Oct. 10-12.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. Generally patronage.

STRANGE JUSTICE: Marian Marsh, Reginald Denny—A flop at the box-office, and not worth playing.—Guy W. Johnson Theatres, Marmarth and Bowman, N. D.

SYMPHONY OF SIX MILLION: I couldn't ask for a better production. Usual pre-holiday slump. Patrons enthusiastic.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

WAY BACK HOME: Phillips "Seth Parker" Lord Wonderful Xmas business and how it did please my folks—especially the old timers. Some of the voices could have been more distinct, but there were no kicks—only praise.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

Tiffany

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry, Beryl Mercer—Just a fair picture which I thought would draw a better than average patronage, but it did not draw, and did not seem to please my patrons. Played Nov. 8-9.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

United Artists

MAGIC NIGHT: Jack Buchanan—Foreign-made and produced. If you want walk-outs, run it.—Krieghbaum Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—This picture has no place in any theatre. Terrible both as a picture and at the box office. Companies should not be allowed to release pictures of this kind.—Krieghbaum Bros., Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

SKY DEVILS: Spencer Tracy—This may be old, but it's better than a lot of super-specials. Spencer Tracy is very good, and with the help of George Cooper, they keep the audience in an uproar. Played Dec. 23-24.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

COME ON, GANG, SAYS JOE HEWITT

Says Joe Hewitt, manager of the Lincoln theatre, at Robinson, Ill., and Joe Hewitt knows whereof he speaks, as a "vet" of the department:

"Bring on those reports! Give 'em credit . . . or give 'em Hell . . . as the case may justify! Don't think for one minute the producers don't watch these reports! They do! I know from experience, because 'way back I had letters from directors and stars, which proved that they watch this old column. . . . BUT be fair . . . don't let petty prejudice influence your reports. . . . You can't knock a good picture because of some petty peeve against the company. All the gang will know when you're unfair . . . but SEND IN THOSE REPORTS. Otherwise, Mister Quigley will order it out . . . and that would kill old Dad Jenkins. . . ."

WHITE ZOMBIE: Bela Lugosi—Will hurt your theatre if you run it.—Krieghbaum Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Very good film with plenty of action. Starts with a crash and ends with one. Keeps audience attentive throughout. Unless you exploit this picture, don't play during week. Suitable for Saturday or Sunday showing.—O. A. Wodke, Nebel Amusement Company, Majestic Theatre, Lake Mills, Wis.

THE DOOMED BATTALION: Tala Birell, Victor Varconi—These foreign-made babies are hard to put over. The dialogue is rather hard to understand and the theme of the story is somewhat disconnected. The comments are divided. The production, however, is a work of art, and will be greatly appreciated by those few who are able to grasp the thing. If you can plan on this, suggest you see it first so that you can exploit it properly.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Those that run westerns, this will please 100%. Tom Mix is able to whip the whole gang alone. Played Dec. 31.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF LIFE: Clarence Darrow—Ran this a year ago. It is a sleeper in many situations. It will gross big anywhere if you heavily advertise "what you see in the picture," item by item. Exhibitors loaded with high hat sophisticate pictures whose action is halted and story lost by songs should run above as a double header and save themselves. Have confidence in it—bill it heavily as above—and collect.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan—A dandy program picture. Holds interest and should please all. Played Dec. 18-19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Oakie, Alice MacMahon, Zasu Pitts—Failed to draw, but because of severe cold weather and "flu" epidemic. A funny picture to theatre men and readers of movie magazines, but a lot of people don't know anything about studios and producers, and to them the story is too strange. Played Dec. 11-12. Running time, 90 minutes—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie—Universal is making good pictures this year, but here is one big disappointment. I agree with other exhibitors that have reported this a flop. Universal calls this their greatest comedy, and I was greatly surprised at reactions of patrons who shouted from the house about it. You can rest assured it will not go over in small towns, and will not please at all. Played Nov. 1.—P. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural patronage.

RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY: Tom Mix—The Mix pictures were losing ground in silents, but these new pictures seem to be bringing back new life to Mix. This was a very good Western; very little shooting, and some wonderful scenic shots. Pleased all of our patrons. Played Nov. 4-5.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, S. D. General patronage.

STRICTLY DISHONORABLE: Paul Lukas—A fair picture, but did not take well with my patrons. Not enough action to please small town patrons. Played Oct. 25-26—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. All classes.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—Wonderful picture which pleases the majority. It did not draw, but nothing draws well for us these days. Played Dec. 29-30.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—A very good picture. Most everyone seemed to like it. Business good. Played Dec. 29-30.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Here is another picture that your patrons will eat up and lick the platter clean. You can stand in the lobby when the show is over without fear of being cussed for having a rotten show, because they will like this one, and tell you so.—Gerald Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Played this on Sunday and Monday. A very good picture pleasing all types. With the recent publicity the author of this story has received, should induce the public even more to see this production.—O. A. Wodke, Nebel Amusement Company, Majestic Theatre, Lake Mills, Wis.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young, Eric Linden, Aline MacMahon—"Flu" epidemic and pre-Xmas week hurt this, but will bring it back for another showing as we have had telephone calls asking if it would be back. Created a lot of mouth to mouth talk, and those looking for something daring and spicy came out thinking about this clever story and picture of real life, and they were willing to pay a tribute to "Mother." For adults and high-school students only. Played Dec. 20-22. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young—It has sobs, and its laughs should please. Some thought it fine, others not so good, but business was good regardless. Should please. Played, Dec. 26-27.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—Drew better than average with the younger folks. A mighty fine piece of entertainment. Almost entirely action is on board an ocean liner. Aline MacMahon shines as a crook in this one. Frank McHugh adds some great comedy. Played Dec. 25-26. Running time, 68 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE PURCHASE PRICE: Barbara Stanwyck—This was a five star production in our town and should make a hit in the northwest as it is a picture supposed to be filmed in our own state, and what's more, my patrons will go to see Barbara in any picture. They all like her. Played Nov. 18-19. Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. Dak. General patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Chic Sale—A great picture for the small town, and well liked by all. It will please 100%.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatres, Marmarth and Bowman, N. D.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett, Neil Hamilton—Fair draw at box-office. Nice little picture for admirers of Constance, and will please most of the patrons anywhere. Played Dec. 18-19. Running time, 71 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—A very good picture with lots of action and some very good fighting. Some of our lady patrons enjoyed the picture as much as the men. Played Nov. 11-12.—Frank J. Ujka, Grand Theatre, Larimore, N. D. General patronage.

Columbia

SHAVE IT WITH MUSIC: Fred and Dorothy Stone—Splendid comedy. Miss Stone dances beautifully, which makes this short subject doubly attractive.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La.

EGYPTIAN MELODIES: Silly Symphony—A very amusing cartoon.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va.

HICCUPS, THE CHAMP: Krazy Kat—Not much. Poorest cartoon I ever saw.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Educational

BILLBOARD GIRL: Bing Crosby—Very good, and the Bing Crosby fans simply ate it up. He sings in this one.—(Mrs.) Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La.

PARAMOUNT CARTOONS AND SCREEN SONGS: You have got to hand it to Paramount for the best sound on the market. The reproduction of sound is perfect.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Family and rural patronage.

ROMANTIC MELODIES: Arthur Tracy (Street Singer)—You haven't heard any singing until you hear Arthur Tracy in this screen song. He is great in this one. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

SING A SONG: Screen song—Mighty good. This man Melton has a good voice and sings three songs. Some clever cartoon work. Good filler on any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

SING A SONG: James Melton—The sweetest screen song we've ever shown. Better than many two-reelers. When James Melton sings "Love's Old Sweet Song," and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," well—play it and see for yourself. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

TIME ON MY HANDS: Screen song—Just an ordinary screen song. Not as good as some we have played.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va.

WHEN IT'S SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH: Boswell Sisters—All tinted film, and very good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

RKO

CATFISH ROMANCE: Fables—Excellent short on any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

United Artists

WAYWARD CANARY: Cartoon—One of the best cartoons we ever ran.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greensville, Mich.

Universal

AROUND THE WORLD IN 18 MINUTES: Sort of a traveltalk with announcer making wisecracks. Just fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

DR. JEKYLL'S HIDE: Terrible. One of the Brevities and not worth running. Running time, 8 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

DOCTOR'S ORDERS: Just another two reels of supposed comedy that's not to be laughed at. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

KID GLOVES: Slim Summerville—Comedy of army life. Plenty of action and fun. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

MEET THE PRINCFSS: Slim Summerville—Not up to Slim's usual quality—a few laughs, but not worth a lot to any program. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

THE RUNT PAGE, and THE GREEKS HAD NO WORD FOR THEM; Two more Brevities and we screened them and left in the box. Fact is, we haven't had a Brevity yet that was worth running, and we've tried them all. Running time, 8 minutes each.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS: A very fine 1-reel subject. Will build up any bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

Warner Vitaphone

BABE O' MINE: New Pepper Pots—Used this single reel with "Life Begins," feature, and believe it or not we had a lot of comment from women about this little short subject that shows a mighty sweet baby's doings in one day. Running time, 8 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

BOSKO'S PARTY: Cartoon—usual good quality of music and cartoon work. Running time, 6 minutes. —R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

C'EST PAREE: Technicolor—Beautiful coloring. Some excellent group singing by men. Good dancing numbers, and a cyclonic banjo act. Mighty nice short to add anywhere. Running time, 18 minutes. —R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

MODERN CINDERELLA: Ruth Etting—Another very good Technicolor subject. Beautiful settings and music. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

MUSIC TO MY EARS: Jack Denny and Band—Just plenty good for a band act. My folks like 'em. Running time, 7 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

NOTRE DAME vs. SO. CALIFORNIA: Football picture—Very entertaining spoken account of the game illustrated by practically all of the plays. They even repeat the best ones in slow motions. By cutting out the huddles, time out, penalties, etc., the picture is speeded up so it does not become tiresome. Would have been better if the camera had not been quite so far from the players. Running time, 31 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

NOTRE DAME vs. CALIFORNIA: Drew football fans and sure pleased them. Both fast and slow photography, and plays very clear. This is better than the Tulane game from last year, as this is not so long. Evidently all uninteresting plays have been cut from it. I hope they continue to give us one or two complete games each year of the really big football classics. They draw for us. Running time, 33 minutes.—Played Dec. 25-26.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, RADIO ROW, NO. 3: Another clever reel showing radio stars at play. J. C. Flippen, the four Lombardos, Aunt Jemima, Johnny Marvin, Lanin's orchestra and Hall, and Baby Rose Marie. Running time, 8 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

SHERLOCK'S HOME: Jack Haley—Just a fair comedy. A few laughs, but old style comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

TIP-TAP-TOE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—A clever two-reel subject with wonderful dancing by the two stars. Will add much to any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. H. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

TIP-TAP-TOE: Hal LeRoy—A great 2-reel subject. Very fine dancing act. One of the best.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

Serials

RKO

LAST FRONTIER: Creighton Chaney—Have run 8 chapters. It's just another serial, not as good as "Air Mail Mystery." Both these serials repeated too much of former chapter. Direction not so hot. In 7th chapter, a shack about 14 feet by 16 feet was afire from ground up, completely enveloped in flames outside scene, inside just a little fire and smoke. An old Tom Mix fight where one man whips several single-handed.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Universal

AIR MAIL MYSTERY: James Flavin and Lucille Brown—The first reel of each chatper repeats what was done the week before. So out of the 12 chapters you really get six reels. Very hard to follow. 25% entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Rural patronage.

BRITISH BREAKING UP PREJUDICE BY EASING CENSOR RESTRICTIONS

Liverpool Committee Decides Parent Should Be Final Arbiter of What Child May See, Contrary to Justices' Rulings

British Instructional Films Starts Another Season of Special Saturday Morning Shows for the Children of the Empire

by BERNARD CHARMAN

London Correspondent

A wave of commonsense at last has percolated beyond the drift sands of phlegmatic British prejudice and washed away the rock-like opposition of a retrogressive local authority. I mean Liverpool, ranked as third—or fourth (I never was good at geography)—town in the United Kingdom, the city that made itself famous, or infamous, by putting up the bar against children at picture theatres showing that pernicious propaganda, the "A" film. You don't have this grading system in your free land of America, which groups films into those considered fit for everybody to see, those fit only for "adults" to see, and those fit for nobody to see, but it's real enough with us; so real, in fact, that licensing bodies are able to rope us up tight and fast in it.

That, you'll recall, is what Liverpool did when the licensing justices (their title, not mine) sat in judgment in their full power and majesty on the cinema and solemnly decreed that little children, be they never so little, might not be admitted to cinemas playing pictures which had received only the adult certificate, nay, not even when accompanied by fond parent (or "bonafide guardian"). Inspired, no doubt, by the sound of its own name, the government Home Office previously had issued a benevolent edict suggesting that Momma and Poppa might take Junior with them to the pictures, whatever the production, relying on the good judgment of M and P as to what was good for their offspring. Liverpool, however, thought differently. "Bless us!" they said, "As if the parents can possibly judge what is best for their own child. Oh no! We'll put a stop to that nonsense!" And they did.

When Censors Fall Out

But some unknown benefactor, or maybe some diplomat of the local branch CEA, obviously has thrown a spanner into the gearbox, for the entertainments committee of the same Bench of Justices (Oh, the multiplication of local governing authorities!) decided recently that the decision of the justices was not binding on them, and that, moreover, in their opinion the parent should be the final arbiter of what the child may see at the picture theatre. And there and then they proceeded to remove the embargo, and free showmen in one of the most populous areas of Britain from the incubus that steadily has been widening the breach between themselves and their box-offices.

The newly-granted annual licenses of Liverpool exhibitors now bear the provision, therefore, that was originally recommended by the Home Office, and so unanimous were the members of the committee that they did not even desire to hear the evidence that was to have been placed before them in extenuation of the demands of the cinema men. What makes the decision the more remarkable is the fact that at a recent sitting of the Liverpool authority the exhibitors had been refused a hearing, and the ban had been reaffirmed. But that's all one now, and I can be excused for breaking into Shakespeare.

$100,000,000 IN FRENCH INDUSTRY

French motion picture companies, taken in the aggregate, represent currently an invested capital of 3,000,000,000 French francs, approximately $100,000,000 in American money at present exchange rates, according to statistics appearing in the French press and transmitted to the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce by E. C. Taylor, assistant trade commissioner at Paris. The business turnover annually in France amounts to more than 4,000,000,000 francs, while exploitation alone accounts for 1,000,000,000 francs. There are 4,000 motion picture theatres, with an aggregate of 2,500,000 seats in the country.

In Manchester (next door neighbor of Liverpool) they have a saying: "What Manchester thinks today, the rest of England will think tomorrow," and it is only reasonable to suppose the adage embraces the sister town. It would most assuredly seem to have been so, for the original Liverpool Declaration of Restriction was followed sheep-like by a number of other authorities, and a serious cancer began to form in the body politic of the English cinema industry.

There still remain a few tough quarters, wherein the guardians of local morality hold yet to the opinion that the cinema is a den of vice and corruption and should, consequently, be secured in a firm grip. In such areas the showman must either be sufficiently thick of skin to ignore the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" or he must be a hero of the True-Blue Harold variety. What with exclusion of children, no opening on Sundays, no . . . no . . . no . . . far, far into the night, he has but a sorry tale to tell.

Children's Shows

Reverting to the question of the child, it is of interest to learn that British Instructional Films has started another season of its special Saturday morning shows for children. The response to this enterprise in its first season proved that there was a very decided need for this type of show and that the demand on the part of a wide circle of teachers and parents warranted a further attempt to provide these matinees on an even larger scale.

H. Bruce Woolfe, managing director of BIF, told me that the company had received great encouragement from educational authorities, and that in certain districts they were receiving substantial support. He quoted Bristol as an example, where the local Children's Cinema Council, which for some years has interested itself in the problem of providing suitable film entertainment for children, has abandoned its own enterprise in favor of the BIF effort.

Croydon (focus of the Sunday opening fight) is one district in which the experiment has taken on well. At the opening performance of the season the youngsters started queueing a full hour and a half before the show, in order to see a program consisting of "Rango," one of the BIF interest shorts, a newsreel and a cartoon. That, incidentally, is a fair specimen of what the young generation receives in exchange for its Saturday pennies.

"Our experience," Bruce Woolfe told me, "is leading us to the opinion that a good variety program composed of short interest, comedy and instructional subjects with perhaps a serial drama in short episodes or a short dramatic story, is likely to prove the nearest approach to the ideal children's program under present conditions. That is the type of film that it should be possible to produce without great difficulty to meet this special market."

The number of cinemas showing these programs has been increased this year, and the weekly aggregate of attendances now reaches 20,000. That gives an average of around 1,000 to each hall. And when all the picture theatres are playing special programs to a thousand little people each Saturday there will be no more need for wrangling over their admission to performances for grown-ups!

The Film Institute

A clear statement of the case for a National Film Institute is contained in the quarterly organ of the Commission on Cultural and Educational Films. It says:

"Such doubts as have been expressed in trade circles concerning the Institute appear to arise either from fear lest the Institute might attempt to produce films itself, or from the fear that the Institute might be used in some way by the Government as a means of more stringent film censorship. . . . It has been explicitly said over and over again that a National Film Institute will not itself produce films, having neither the technical nor financial resources for this kind of work.

"The Institute will leave film production to existing film producers, only advising them as to the kind of film which is needed and upon the best way to give it publicity. Nor will the Film Institute undertake the thankless task of censorship in the restrictive sense, since the whole case for a Film Institute rests upon the belief that constructive action to encourage good films is better than restrictive action to discourage bad ones."

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

BALLYHOO AND ADVERTISING!

THE ABILITY TO DETERMINE the right from the wrong and the good from the bad is of even greater importance than the ability to create. . . . All too often many of our best little creating geniuses pop out of bed with a "wow" of an idea and before they think the idea over . . . they have it in the works and then . . . hell breaks loose when they find that they've pulled a boner. . . . They simply failed to analyze the idea from beginning to end and to figure out if there were any bad slants that might bring about a kick-back. . . .

THIS IS ESPECIALLY TRUE of exploitation and ballyhoo gags. . . . Both are classified as "stunts" and all stunts must be carefully thought out before going through with them. . . . What . . . at first thought . . . appears to be a funny ballyhoo can oftimes become a headache. . . . Sending any man or group out into the business sections of your city to pull some gag or stage an act . . . or in fact . . . to do anything to attract attention . . . ought to be sensibly worked out and your own self thoroughly convinced that it will not bring about any adverse comment. . . .

IT THEREFORE BECOMES VERY important that you use that head of yours and avoid trouble . . . don't develop brain-fever creating lunatic ballyhoo stunts . . . because practically all ballyhoos cost money, and money should be spent with extreme caution these days . . . maybe if you were paying for your various ballyhoos out of your own pocket you would think a few times before plunging into them. . . . Not that we want to throw cold water on your enthusiasm or creative machinery . . . perish the thought . . . we merely want to do more thinking and less rushing . . .

ENTHUSIASM IS A GREAT ASSET . . . any showman who conscientiously devotes time to planning ticket-selling ideas . . . should be encouraged . . . but he must remember that every cheese sandwich isn't a banquet . . . neither is every bunch of flowers a bouquet . . . (thanks to F. W.) . . . if you go haywire into every hair-brained . . . carelessly planned stunt . . . just remember . . . that is NOT ballyhoo . . . It is better captioned . . . suicide. . . .

REAL BALLYHOO IS SHOWMANSHIP . . . of the ticket selling variety . . . those capable of originating this latter type are entitled to the designation . . . real showmen . . . and remember . . . original ideas are none too numerous . .

IF MY MEMORY SERVES ME right . . . I believe it was Roger W. Babson, that expert of economics, who made the statement that . . . "Well directed advertising can do more than any other one factor to hasten economic recovery in the United States." . . .

If this is true about the country in general . . . just think how true it must be for theatre business. . . . A business whose very existence is dependent upon advertising in one form or another . . . and now with admissions at the lowest level since the start of the depression we can think of no better way of building back to normalcy than through well directed advertising. . . . And . . . surprising as it may sound for the moment . . . we are not going to tell you that newspaper advertising is the only good form for theatres . . . there are others, and we'll touch on a graphic example to prove our contention that "well directed advertising" should mean the best form of advertising for the individual situation involved. . . .

A CERTAIN THEATRE NOT FAR from New York City had been falling off in receipts over a period of three years at the rate of about two hundred dollars a week each year . . . where it was grossing an average of eighteen hundred a week three years ago it was struggling to maintain a meagre twelve hundred now. . . . Recently the house changed hands and . . . this is what they did . . .

THEY TOOK A SMALL AMOUNT of space in the daily paper . . . rates being high and area large . . . they did not want to put all their eggs in one basket . . . so . . . only three inches by one column was taken . . . then they hired a billposter and made a complete coverage of their drawing radius through the careful spotting of seventy-five three-sheets . . . including two on contract at the local railroad station . . . a swell move because thousands of commuters used that station morning and night . . . then they built up a mailing list from thirteen hundred to six thousand . . . and still growing. . . .

IT IS MOST INTERESTING to record that since the fourth week of this diversified style in advertising, business has been constantly mounting and is now safely averaging over fourteen hundred a week and still climbing . . . and the moral of this story . . . if it needs one . . . is . . . the same medicine may kill one patient and cure another. . . .

SPECIAL SIGNS AND DISPLAYS FEATURED CALDWELL CAMPAIGN

Special windows, rigged for both fashion displays and cards, special sign displays, attractive posters and the usual aggressive newspaper campaign, featured work done on "Flesh" by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio.

The above included placing of 100 Neon signs in merchants' windows in all sections of the city; sixteen special downtown windows for display of 11x14's mounted on theatre cards; special "Flesh" fashion window with huge cutout flesh letters for background, studded with still and half-sheet, in large department store; six large still displays in exclusive women's shoe shop; special 6-sheet in large, empty store window; special one-sheets in lobbies of two hotels; special art in newspapers, and the usual Caldwell coverage in local and rural papers within radius of 50 miles of Toledo.

Just a bit more evidence that Caldwell is putting forth his usual efforts on the Toledo front. Every time we digest one of his campaigns we are impressed with the fact that he strongly capitalizes on a wide acquantance among local merchants, an asset which no manager can acquire when faced with constant transfers. Loew men seem to stay put for a reasonable time.

WHO SAID "DEPRESSION"?

Doesn't look like a shortage in customers at the United Artists Theatre in San Francisco when "The Kid from Spain" made its popular price debut. Here is a small portion of the line which extended for almost a block and a half. According to Manager Herman L. Cohen, the picture broke all attendance records over a long period.

BOSWELL ORGANIZED HIS BIRTHDAY CLUB WITH NEWSPAPER AID

Birthday Clubs such as organized by John H. Boswell, manager of the Warner theatres in Owensboro, Ky., serve the dual purpose of good will and box-officer booster for the theatre and as a corking reader interest gag for the newspaper concerned in the tie-up.

We have at hand a tear sheet from an Owensboro paper which, under a two column head, carried a story on the Birthday Club following its two weeks' duration. The writer called attention to a Tom Mix picture as particularly interesting fare for the many youngsters whose names were listed below, through pointing out that the privilege of attending any show during the week was theirs for the asking. Children were advised to call at the newspaper office for their tickets.

Much has been written concerning Birthday Clubs in this department from time to time, ranging from information on clubs formed among scholars to those organized from wholesale listing of a town's younger population. The movement doesn't even have to be confined to the kiddies, since we've run across many instances of sending our tickets to members of the older set.

Apparently a birthday notice and the gift of tickets, particularly when handled through a tie-up with a newspaper, continues to be one of the sure-fire methods of stirring up publicity and good will for the sponsors. Boswell, by the way, is one of Lee Goldberg's hustling lieutenants down in the Louisville district, and we're glad to hear about his activities through the courtesy of his chief. We'll be looking for more news from his sector.

WE HEAR FROM NOEL ROAKE 'WAY OVER IN NEW ZEALAND HOUSE

From far-off Christchurch, New Zealand, comes the first contribution to the Club from Noel Roake, manager of the Regent theatre there.

Roake started a lot of word-of-mouth comment on a picture by tying in with a local newspaper on a star-identification contest. Nine photos were each cut into three pieces and so transposed to form nine entirely new faces, which even their parents wouldn't recognize. The gag was to cut them again and realign the pieces in their proper places. Through the paper the theatre offered passes to those who successfully demonstrated their skill. The nine published photos secured a fine amount of free space.

When playing "First Year" distribution of 5,000 "wedding invitation" folders that carried the Farrell-Gaynor wedding scene materially contributed to the good business done on this picture. The folders were of good stock and informed the readers that they were "cordially invited to the wedding of Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell at the Regent Theatre."

We're mighty glad to number Roake among the Club's correspondents and will look forward to receipt of other news from his section of the world. His identification contest was novel and no doubt caused many a reader of the paper to scratch his head in dismay. We are not informed how many solved the puzzle but do not imagine it was any great strain on the box office.

BALLY GAVE COOPER RECORD BUSINESS ON THIRD RUN PICTURE

Comes word from out in Youngstown, Ohio, where A. J. and E. B. Cooper control the destinies of the Hippodrome Theatre, that a third run on "White Zombie" lined 'em up 'way out to the street and did record two-day business. Stunts used turned the trick, thinks E. B., hence he's passing along the information.

A ballyhoo truck with a large frame made to carry 24-sheets on either side was used on the streets one night from 6.30 to 10.30 P. M. Bright lights shone from the "eyes" of the 24 while baby spots were trained on the poster. On top of the truck was a loudspeaker amplified from within. A "Zombie" record with its weird sounds attracted a lot of attention.

Another amplifying system was hooked up in front of the theatre, with a loudspeaker atop the box office playing a duplicate "Zombie" record. A "mike" was also hooked up to the system to broadcast a description of the picture. An outside ballyhoo man disguised as a "Zombie" also did effective work. Lobby and foyer were decked with the title letters and face of "White Zombie."

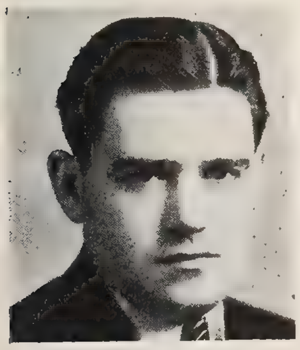
Cooper's showing with the above named picture in view of a third run is certainly worthy of commendation. He gives full credit to the several ballyhoos employed. We'll be interested to learn what else is going on out his way.

Brown at Peekskill

George Brown, recently with Publix Theatres as contact man on the George Walsh division in Pennsylvania and New York, has succeeded Theodore M. Horowitz as manager of the Paramount Theatre in Peekskill, N. Y. Horowitz, who resigned, at this writing has not announced a future connection.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Showbusiness beckoned to Arthur R. Joy at the age of 18 years and he chose it for a career because he liked being around people, which is about as good a reason as any for wanting to be around a theatre.



Arthur R. Joy

Arthur started in down at the bottom of the ladder, working his way along the line from ushering to his present position as manager of the Liberty Theatre, Trail, British Columbia. He first went with the Famous Players Canadian Corp., and has kept at the game ever since, except for a brief period when the glamour of a newspaperman's career temporarily divorced him from his first love.

He was born in Nelson, B. C., on January 4th, 1909, which classes him among the younger members of our Club, and was educated in public and high schools of his birthplace. If he had to start all over again he'd undoubtedly choose the theatre as a means of livelihood, he tells us, and so, as far as we know, he is in the game for the balance of his active life.

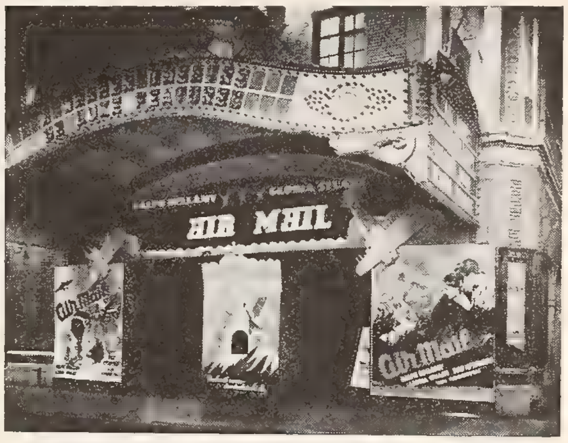
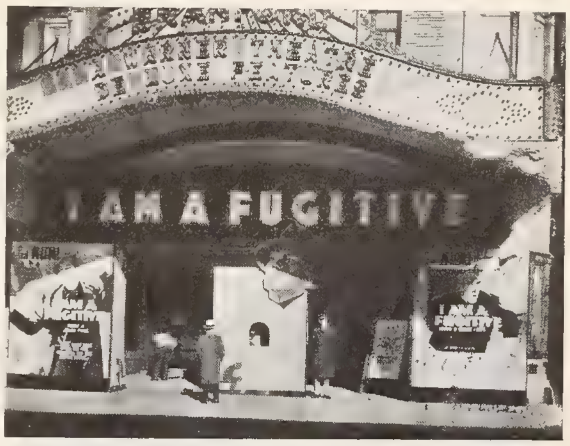
TWO FRONTS TURNED OUT IN NEWARK BY MURPHY AND LEACH

The accompanying illustrations show view of two lobby displays turned out recently by Clem Murphy and Walter Leach, respectively managing director and assistant manager of the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J.



Aside from the fact that both displays were very attractive it is interesting to note that they cost the management "peanuts." Without an art department and with little outside aid. Murphy saved the exchequer at least $100 when building this front, which was apparently used for both "Air Mail" and "Fugitive" by making slight alterations. The inner display was a corker, too, we hear, but no photo is available at present.



Thanks to the loquacious Mr. Zimbalist, member of Don Jacocks' publicity gang, for passing the photos along, and congratulations to Murphy and Leach for turning out effective displays at low cost. We shall look forward to hearing more news from the Warner-Stanley-Fabian showmen.

MacPHERSON TIED UP WITH NEWSPAPER FOR XMAS BENEFIT SHOW

It's been some time since we last heard from G. MacPherson, operator of the theatre out in Nubieber, Calif., an interesting Californian development described by its local newspaper as "where the railroads meet."

We note by the same newspaper that MacPherson and it got together for a Big Benefit Show to provide Xmas baskets for the needy and that the paper contributed a full page ad to publicize the occasion. That's cooperation, all right, and more power to our friend Mack for his share in putting over the good work. He promises to tell us about his activities in future commuications.

BILL BYERS TURNED OUT FINE CAMPAIGN ON GALA SHOW MONTH

A special newspaper section that was a distinct credit to its makers, a radio program running through the week, street car and out of town advertising, were features of the campaign made on Gala Show Season by Bill Byers, manager of the Plaza Theatre, Asheville, N. C., and others on the staff of Publix-Bamford in that city.

NOVEMBER
ASHEVILLE'S GALA SHOW MONTH

The men who got out the special newspaper section of 16 pages obviously put time and thought on the making of it, judging from its attractive appearance and novelty of make-up. The front page was devoted to stories concerning product to be shown by Publix-Bamford theatres in Asheville and a boxed message from the Mayor. Succeeding pages carried a wide assortment of stories and Hollywood anecdotes of interest to the fans and a most profitable quota of merchant advertising. A striking and attractive feature of practically every ad was the insertion of some scene mat from a picture and cleverly written copy tying up the mat with the ad. We have observed isolated instances of this practice but never such an elaborate carrying out of the scheme from cover to cover. The "Club Medal" to the fellows who did the work! Through the medium of the Sunday edition of the newspaper 50,000 copies went into 50,000 homes in western North Carolina.

All newspapers within a fifty mile radius of Asheville ran 2-column ten-inch ads, scene mats and notices in return for passes. The local radio broadcasting station presented an opening program on Sunday and continued it through the week. Attractive window displays were arranged and street cars carried large cloth banners during the entire period, as the accompanying photos bear evidence. One thousand paper cards were posted ten days in advance. All theatres were dressed in Fall colors of yellow and black, which was the same color scheme carried out on all advertising matter during the drive.

Full credit to Bill Byers and the other Publix-Bamford boys down in Asheville for planning and executing a drive marked by many effective advertising novelties. That this campaign was scheduled for the month of November is no particular reason why it couldn't be pulled any time from now on until beginning of the Lenten season. Let's hope that other aggressive showmen in this Club become inspired by the fine showing made by Byers and the rest of Asheville managers in their efforts to boost city trade in general by staging a Gala Show Month.

BUCHANANS OPEN THEIR NEW HOUSE IN ASHVILLE, OHIO

A long awaited event was realized a few weeks ago when Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Buchanan, husband-and-wife operators of the Dreamland Theatre, Ashville, and two recently elected members of this Club, opened the doors of their new house to the public.

Even though Ashville was well aware that a new theatre was in its midst, the Buchanans took pains to advertise heavily in local newspapers and by wide distribution of special heralds. One of their heralds carried a personal message from the manager and stated that "for ten years he had been in this hectic game called showbusiness, had looked at many pictures—some good, some bad—but never had he seen such a worth-while line-up of product as on the way to the Dreamland," etc. Another herald also stressed the high calibre of coming attractions.

In a wide-measure column on the editorial page of the newspaper the editor devoted a good sized story to the local opening, even mentioning title of the first attraction to be shown at the new playhouse. The editorial also voiced the Buchanans' appreciation to "each and every business man in town for the cooperation."

With a nice new house to do business in we know Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan will be very much on the job of show-selling. Here's wishing both lots of luck and a hope they will keep their Club regularly posted on all that they are doing to promote satisfactory returns at the box office.

EGAN GAVE COUNTY FAIR ATMOSPHERE TO RELIEF MATINEE

We might have known that Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, would inject something different in the proceedings when he staged his first "Vegetable Matinee," which, according to reports, must have taken on appearance of County Fair.

His affair was different in that the vegetables were judged as to size, quality, etc., and each of the winners received a pass for three to a regular performance at the Palace. Awards were made after the show.

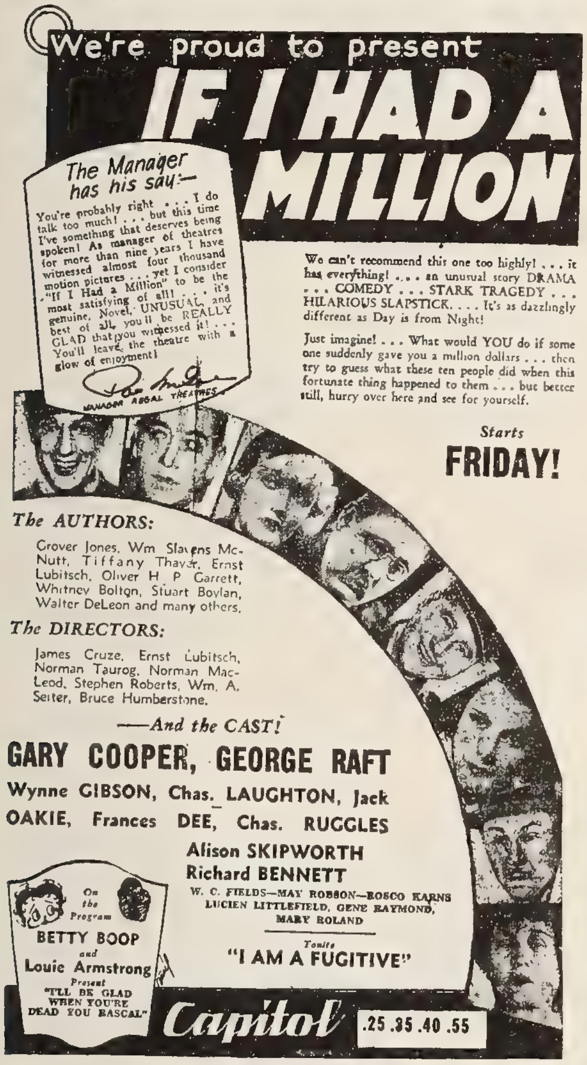
Over 1,600 youngsters brought enough fine produce to the theatre to fill two large trucks supplied by the "Calgary Herald" and tax the muscles of a whole troop of Boy Scouts on hand to assist with loading. Not content to bring a half-dozen vegetables in lieu of admission to the matinee, a majority of the kiddies brought whole sacks of potatoes, cabbage, beets, melons and whatnot. The show was made possible through cooperation of the Projectionists' Union, Pete Egan and his staff and the Scout Troop.

Judging of the prize vegetables certainly gave Pete's affair a novel twist and additional interest, so we're passing along his idea for others to consider in case they contemplate holding one of these popular matinees to relieve the poor in their neighborhoods. About at this writing, we can guess that Showman Egan is up to his neck with preparations for a Toy Matinee and, if so, we'll tell you more next time we hear from Calgary.

NEWSPAPER AD WAS FEATURE OF WORK DONE BY PAT McGEE

Included in the campaign made on "If I Had a Million" by Pat McGee, manager of Regal Theatres, Oklahoma City, Okla., was the attractive ad pictured here. As far as we can see it has all the ear-marks of having been turned out by Pat himself, from the catchline at top right through. Note the box up in the left hand corner, in which McGee personally endorsed the picture, and also the strip of photos showing players in character.

Other features of the campaign included showing of a two-frame trailer in five other theatres three weeks in advance; three fifteen-minute radio broadcasts of a review of the picture by local critic; a lobby display which emphasized illustrations of entire cast; marquee display based on prominence of players to be seen in picture; featuring of title by special, double-faced electric sign above marquee; special screening for about 300 local people four days in advance of opening; box office enclosed to represent paying teller's window in bank. and all other usual items, such as de luxe screen trailer service, supplementary ads after opening, etc.



We're proud to present

IF I HAD A MILLION

The Manager has his say:—

You're probably right . . . I do talk too much! . . . but this time I've something that deserves being spoken! As manager of theatres for more than nine years I have witnessed almost four thousand motion pictures . . . yet I consider "If I Had a Million" to be the most satisfying of all! . . . it's genuine. Novel, UNUSUAL, and best of all, you'll be REALLY GLAD that you witnessed it! . . . You'll leave the theatre with a glow of enjoyment!

Manager Regal Theatres

We can't recommend this one too highly! . . . it has everything! . . . an unusual story DRAMA . . . COMEDY . . . STARK TRAGEDY . . . HILARIOUS SLAPSTICK. . . . It's as dazzlingly different as Day is from Night!

Just imagine! . . . What would YOU do if some one suddenly gave you a million dollars . . . then try to guess what these ten people did when this fortunate thing happened to them . . . but better still, hurry over here and see for yourself.

We believe it will pay to give some thought to the campaign briefly outlined above, because of the excellent returns reported on the Oklahoma City engagement. We hear the show did much better there than in other sections and this was undoubtedly due to the way McGee put it over. Note that player prominence was strongly stressed.

REVIVING AMATEUR NIGHTS!

This good old box office stimulant has again proven its worth for quite a few theatres in the eastern and midwestern territories and will bear serious consideration from showmen who feel that it may be worth repeating as an aid to some particularly off-night.

The question of whether you should use strictly local amateurs or engage some of the so-called professional amateurs is a point to be decided by the man who runs the house. It is, really, of no great importance. If your town or community has a good percentage of talented young people by reason of their interest in amateur theatricals, etc., then you may find it a simple proposition to get enough of them enrolled so as to present some semblance of a real entertaining amateur night. If such talent is lacking in numbers sufficient to accomplish this purpose then it may be very desirable to engage the other kind.

A good master of ceremonies is of major importance for two reasons; first, he can tie the show together and keep up the interest; second, he can keep the rowdy element in the audience in check. Next to the M. C., you must have either a good small orchestra, preferably with real vaudeville experience and capable of following the amazing trail of an amateur who goes haywire and needs help, or a pianist of equal competence.

Throw your make-believe dignity into the ash can and see if this gag is not worth a try. Just remember this: if it goes over at all it will be a box office smash for weeks on end, or just so long as you are able to keep up the local interest because of the good show and fun the audience gets out of it.

FOURMET-McDONALD'S FINE CO-OPS; ALSO AN IDEA ON CHAPLIN

We are indebted to Jennings McDonald, assistant to Manager Fourmet at the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Texas, for sending in some data on the campaign they made on "Bring 'Em Back," and while it's a little late to be making reports on that picture, it's not a bit too late to compliment this pair on the fine showing they made in the matter of coöperative advertising.

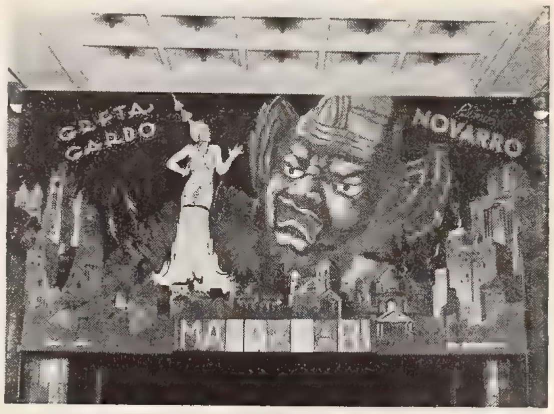
Backed up by the Chamber of Commerce, which they sold the idea of tying in a Dollar Day in conjunction with copy using picture's title, a full page and an extensive assortment of smaller display ads were promoted for the occasion. All merchants fully cooperated by staging "Bring 'Em Back Alive" sales, use of window displays and slogan stickers, all in addition to regular advertising and exploitation activities by the theatre.

We recently listed McDonald among the Assistant Round Tablers and before we sign off on what's going on at the Ellanay, we'll jot down a couple of showselling suggestions Mack made on the forthcoming Charlie Chaplin pictures, even though he doubts that his house will play the films.

He thinks transportation—say a matter of five miles or so—might be promoted for one of the ushers, who is to be dressed in Chaplin costume. On arrival at the local depot he is to be received by a committee and given an ovation. A tie-up with the newspaper should be made to have photographers on hand in order to provide publicity for that end. A band and parade of autos with banners might also be promoted. Mack also thinks the head of Chaplin, such as the one run in the HERALD, could be used for a tie-up with a newspaper to enlist juvenile interest through filling in the missing contour of the face. A Charlie Chaplin Club could be formed and some award made for best efforts, together with gift of a small lead pin for the youngsters to wear on their coat lapels. Mack has an idea that merchants, in addition to the newspaper, would get behind this gag for the entire series.

Okay, Jennings, and thanks for sending the Club word of what your boss, Phil Fourmet, and you are doing to put the Ellanay over the top. Looks to us as though the two of you have formed an effective combination. Let's hear more about what's going on and please give our kindest wishes to Manager Fourmet.

FOREIGN DISPLAY!



Above is a Finnish poster artist's conception of "Mati Hari" and used in connection with the picture's premiere at Helsingfors. R. O. Schoham, M-G-M manager in that city, also arranged for a large display of different Garbo portraits and stills dating back to her first appearance in films.

CUTTING THE ELECTRIC BILLS!

Since economy should be the keynote of your present operating methods we would particularly stress the great savings that can be effected in electric light consumption.

In a six-hundred-seat neighborhood theatre a saving of twelve dollars a week was realized in the following manner: Instead of using three rows of lights on the marquee border the center line was eliminated and dead bulbs screwed into the sockets. Under the marquee, which was arranged in squares, every other lamp on the inside squares of the ceiling was turned off. Inside the theatre a decorative dome was changed from twenty-five watt lamps to ten with very little noticeable difference in the general effect.

Similar savings in wattage was made all through the house, with no sacrifice to brightness where brightness was needed. In other words, instead of just letting the usual wattage burn up a smart showman can cut down considerably, thereby saving a lot of money.

As a suggestion; take a morning in the very near future and start at the top of the house, work your way down through the auditorium, lobby and even the cellars; taking note of every socket where a lamp of smaller wattage can be substituted or the light turned off entirely. You'll be surprised to find how many pennies you can save.

MacLEVY GRABBING PLENTY FREE SPACE IN L. I. NEWSPAPER

Judging the contents of a Long Island newspaper which enjoys an extensive circulation in Queens, N. Y., it is quite evident that Monty MacLevy, former manager of the Savoy Theatre and publicity director of the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, is very much on his toes with his new job as general manager, operating in various Long Island communities.

The particular issue at hand carried a front page streamer head to effect that two of Monty's charges and the newspaper had tied up for organization of a Buck Jones Rangers Club. A two-column story followed. A large two-column holiday box with cut of Santa on the front page also listed two of the theatres among prominent business and professional men who extended the season's greetings to readers.

The second page carried a jump story on the Rangers Club, together with a story announcing the winners of a George Washington statuette painting contest, arranged by MacLevy and participated in by 40-odd boys and girls. Another story on the third page stated that Manager MacLevy was conducting a balloting stunt for revival of former film hits and announced the date for showing of the first picture chosen by popular request.

On the fourth page (editorial) under the head "Mighty Good Work," the lead editorial, it mentioned MacLevy as one of the leaders in the Xmas relief work being done in St. Albans and Springfield Gardens; on the sixth page mention was made that the Welfare Council would meet and discuss distribution of articles received at the Garden Theatre's Benefit Matinee and the seventh carried a long single column story and art on "Great Shows in St. Albans This Week." Owing to a full measure ad he missed the eighth and last page.

Pretty good work for a man who bounced into a new setting just a few weeks ago, don't you think? This is only a starter; we'll have more to tell you of Monty's activities in the near future, or else we're guessing all wrong.

ACCORDING TO PAPER W. EUBANKS IS "MOST USEFUL MAN" IN TOWN

Newspaper clippings tell an interesting story concerning recent activities of W. H. Eubanks, manager of the Richmond Theatre, Rockingham, N. C., and supervisor of the Temple at Sanford and the Gem at Clinton, N. C.

First let's start off with a little blurb about "Cotton" himself, which will inform you all that he won the local Civitan Club's coveted honor of being adjudged "most useful citizen for the year 1932." His work with the Boy Scouts and general all-round charitable endeavors was responsible for this signal honor.

While on the subject of Boy Scouts let us state that Scoutmaster Eubanks and his troop made a Xmas toy matinee an event long to be remembered among the poor of the city. Youngsters were admitted to the show by bringing along one of their old toys, all of which were later put in shape for distribution among the needy.

Not a whit less popular and more to the liking of the older folk was another free show held to gather different articles of food for the poor. More than three tons of foodstuffs were collected at the theatre in lieu of admission and later distributed by a committee from the several local churches.

Other holiday activities included invitations to every deserving youngster in town to witness a free show and entertainment of the football squad of Rockingham High School, the latter an occasion sponsored by a city club and given the boys as a tribute to the fine showing made this season in their schedule of games.

It is easy to see that W. H. "Cotton" Eubanks is thoroughly familiar with what's on in the many phases of community life down in his town and is consequently rated as a highly desired citizen. It is therefore not surprising that he figures so prominently in local newspaper columns and that his theatres are enjoying a relatively healthy trade. From past observations it certainly looks as though the theatre man who gets to be a part of civic life in his town invariably reaps a reward. We'll bank on Eubanks.

Goldblatt's Greetings!

Sam Goldblatt, manager of the Park Lane Theatre, New York City, collaborated with the nearest Chinese laundryman in his neighborhood in the getting up a Xmas herald. Chinese characters were printed on a pink slip of paper, followed by copy stating: "Which Means Merry Xmas and Happy New Year to You From Sam Goldblatt of the Park Lane Theatre."

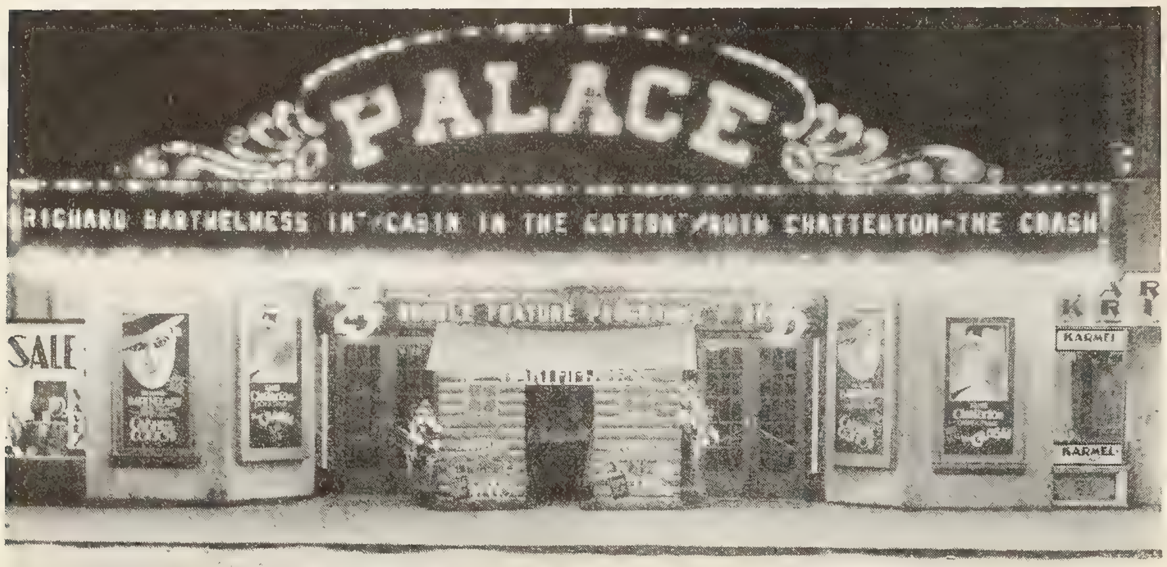
COTTON CABIN IN CALGARY!



PALACE
RICHARD BARTHELMESS IN "CABIN IN THE COTTON" RUTH CHATTERTON-THE CRASH

IT'S quite a distance from Calgary wheat fields to the cotton bottoms below the Mason-Dixon Line, but that didn't prevent Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, from building a miniature cabin in his theatre to provide atmosphere for "Cabin in the Cotton." You can see from the accompanying photo that there's even stalks of cotton or something that looks like it, at either side of the "cabin." Maybe they do grow the stuff up in Pete's country?

Other photographic evidence discloses that Showman Pete obtained a dandy window on "Madison Square Garden" by tying up with a merchant who wanted to push Lux toilet soap. Customers participated in the award of guest tickets. The window belonged to the Hudson Bay Company, largest dealer in the city.

Calgarians also got a glimpse of the jungle when Pete rigged his theatre front in honor of "Congorilla." A profusion of bamboo trees, foliage and cutout heads and full figures of gorillas, produced the desired effect.

In addition to operating the Palace Pete is constantly besought to serve on the boards of various athletic organizations, a newspaper clipping stating that he has been elected vice-president of more clubs, etc., than any other individual in the entire Dominion. So if his fellow Club members do not hear from him as often as they'd like to, this is the reason. For a particularly busy man we think he does pretty well by the Round Table, and here's hoping he keeps up the good work.

ASSISTANT MANAGERS

Managers who are members of the CLUB should take steps to enroll their assistants in our organization as soon as possible.

It will give them an added interest in their work and help you to impress upon them the many responsibilities that go with theatre management.

Assistants so enrolled at the request of their superiors are entitled to all the advantages of the CLUB, but do not receive membership certificates until they have been promoted to a manager's berth.

Hundreds of our most active members joined while they were assistants and found our pages most helpful in acquiring a keen understanding of the manifold duties in theatre management, advertising, exploitation, etc. It's the real school of showmanship and provides a much-needed incentive for them to advance in the business.

MAGAZZU EMPLOYED MANY GOOD STUNTS ON CARNIVAL WEEK

It's a little late to report on a Carnival Week campaign put over by P. A. Magazzu, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., but so many profitable promotional stunts, etc., were carried out by this aggressive showman that we are presenting a brief outline of his work in order that it may be referred to for future campaigns of this nature.

His campaign included full page newspaper advertising; co-operative advertising by merchants; parades; news stories; give-aways; free talent; free musical acts on stage; free street concerts; lobby displays; telegrams posted from well known people and organizations; free decorations; tickets sold in advance by various organizations; promotion of window cards; promotion of heralds and promotion of special tickets used for give-aways, etc.

Newspaper advertising, his main objective, was successful to the extent of 16 full pages, which, if paid for, would have cost over $800. Over 2,800 inches were accounted for. Magazzu personally promoted 8 full pages in 8 different papers, tying in two other theatres on the same circuit in his city.

4,000 Lines Gratis

A dairy, leading auto agency and an ice and coal concern also came through with 8 additional pages of co-operative advertising. Resultant daily newspaper publicity amounted to over 4,000 lines, which, computed at the rate of 10 cents per line, would have set the theatre back over $400.

The awards made each night also contributed another source of valuable publicity. A dairy gave milk each of the seven nights for thirty days; a beauty salon gave a permanent wave each of the seven nights; a haberdashery donated mens' shirts; a jewelry store, a wrist watch; clothing store, suits for man and boy; shoe store, ladies' shoes; dress shop, ladies' dress; coal and ice company, 6 tons of coal; department store, 3-piece living room set; radio dealer, deluxe radio set, etc., etc.

Briefly summing up in dollars and cents what the promotional work would have amounted to, we find that the advertising would have totaled $1,703; the free stage talent, $1,200; musical and other organization donations, $250; awards, $683; free transportation, $25; other gifts, $659. The grand total of this no-cost campaign amounted to over $4,700. Magazzu actually spent $67.20.

There is a wealth of data at hand to back up every figure put down above, and we'll say that grand total of over $4,700 is something to shoot at, particularly when compared to an actual outlay by theatre of only $67. Without a doubt Hazleton was Carnival Week conscious as the result of Magazzu's campaign and he is to be congratulated for putting over such a fine piece of work. Our apologies for not printing a summary of it at an earlier date. However, shooting at his mark may stimulate others when engaged in similar enterprises and, if so, then P. A. has fulfilled his duty to other Club members.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

The fact that his uncle owned a theatre down in Elm City, N. C., was the means of starting Joseph Jay Greene off on his career in showbusiness and he began it as rewind boy in the projection booth, later on graduating to machine operator.

Joseph J. Greene

Since those days Joe has managed a number of theatres, including the Lafayette, Moffett, Chippewa, Ashland, Newstead, Kozy, Bridge — all Skouras holdings in St. Louis—and the Pert, in Gillispie, Ill., and the Opera House, Weldon, N. C. He also had charge of several other houses and did a hitch with the National Supply Company in St. Louis territory.

Greene was born in Elm City, N. C., Nov. 17, 1894, and was educated in High School and a Business College in his home town. He likes showbusiness and is getting along nicely with his present assignment. He is an active member of the Rotary Club, Eagles and Tri-State. The theatre would again claim his attention, he advises us, were he to start all over again.

Dallas Scribe Insulted!

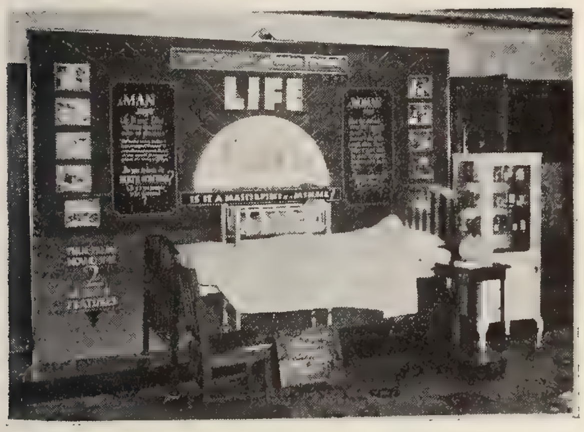
Report has it that a sign in the lobby of the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas, more or less classifying all chatter writers as "keyhole peepers and scandal mongers," so enraged one of that ilk that he requested that the sign be removed. Denying that his copy on "Blessed Event" in any way reflected on the local columnist, whose blurbs had been pasted up for a bit of color, and asserting that he sought only fame and honor for the scribe by associating him with such a personality as Winchell, Paul Short, manager, refused to move the display. And so a blank sheet was pasted over the sacred paragraphs for the balance of the week.

BROWN KNOWS WHAT KIND OF DISPLAYS GO IN BENSONHURST

The populace of the Bensonhurst district of Brooklyn, N. Y., goes for things in a realistic way so William Brown, manager of the Marboro Theatre over there gives 'em just what they want.

For "Life Begins" he radically departed from the delicately suggestive ads first adopted for the picture by the Warner exploitation and advertising force and got right down to brass tacks by setting up a dummy mother and child. The complete ward outfit you see in the accompanying photo was promoted through a tie-up with a local maternity hospital. The dummy head was obtained from a millinery store in the same neighborhood and the body was outlined with short pieces of blanket ends. The assistant manager's daughter loaned the large doll baby in the crib.

Chair, table and all other accessories, including special still obtained through the courtesy of Lou Goldberg of the Warner office, further carried out the general scheme. Additional exploitation included the sending out of special letters to all doctors in the Bensonhurst section.



As stated above, Brown knows his Bensonhurst and what to give it in the way of lobby displays, etc. Not so long ago we recall he used a sensational display depicting a major surgical operation and it went over in his neighborhood in a big way. We'll be telling you more about Bill's work in future issues.

MEYERS USED SAMPLE BALLOT TO EXPLOIT POLITICAL PICTURE

Playing a picture based upon political intrigue around last election time, E. J. Meyers, one of the brothers of that name operating the Majestic Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio, effectively publicized the film through distribution of regular size, old-time election ballots carrying national and local candidates of all parties. At the top of the ballot in red was the following copy: "Look This Ticket Over Carefully—Don't Vote Until You See—Lee Tracy in 'Washington Merry-Go-Round'—It Rips the Lid Off—in the most important political campaign since the Civil War."

Although we haven't heard from the Meyers Brothers in some time the above is evidence that these two showmen are still carrying on, tough times or otherwise. With interest in the past election at fever heat in all sections of the country, we don't doubt for one moment that the sample ballots earned a good share of publicity for the picture. How'ya been, "Ducky"?

BORLAND'S CINDERELLA STUNT

Not a Fairy Story but a Tale of Some Smart Merchandising Put Over by the Manager of Armitage Theatre, Chicago

This is not a Fairy Story even though the subject deals with Cinderella and shoes; rather it is a tale of a smart merchandising campaign which Hugh Borland, manager of the Armitage Theatre, Chicago, arranged with the cooperation of a local dealer in fine shoes. It was called "Cinderella Night" and run every Saturday night over a period of two weeks. Details follow:

The shoe dealer was sold the idea of furnishing 12 pairs of fine quality ladies' shoes (valued at not less than $8 per pair) for give-away each Saturday night to any girl or woman owning feet corresponding to sizes of the shoes. In return the merchant received a screen and program ad every week during the given period. The foyer was selected as the place for fitting the shoes. One of the lady attendants, furnished by the merchant, did the measuring and fitting, and the other queried patrons as to their desire to be fitted as they came in the door. Other accessories from the shoe dealer included a foot stool of plush, a foot measuring machine and a handsome glass display case for the 12 pairs of shoes.

Upon accepting the invitation for fitting patrons were seated in order in comfortable chairs or davenports and a radio entertained them while waiting turn. The girl's or woman's foot was measured and if the size corresponded to any one pair of shoes a fitting was made, which, if satisfactory to the fitter, was the occasion for making an award. The merchant was so well pleased with results attained the first Saturday that he donated 15 pairs of shoes instead of 12. Winners were announced from the stage that night. Names were also carried on the next trailer.

The question mark (?) played a conspicuous part as an emblem in the advance campaign, appearing in the shoe dealer's window, with one-sheet and cut-out mark with flasher in back of card; in red on each front door of the lobby; in foyer, cut-out with flasher; animated mark on trailer; on stage, where 14x36 inch marks were used with flashers; on front page of program, and all incidental advertising. The cut-out marks were made from beaverboard left over from other displays, while the 14x36 marks were formed from insert frames, sides and backs of beaverboard. The others were fashioned from red crepe paper and cardboard. The trailer represented the only actual cash outlay.

All copy was built around the ? mark, such as "The Big Surprise Is Coming Next Week." At the end of the third week of advance exploitation the shoes were placed on display with sign reading: "Here's the Big Surprise: These 12 Pairs of Beautiful Shoes Will Be Given Away," etc. A smaller card read: "Come on Girls and Ladies—From 16 to 60—You May Be a Cinderella—Who Knows?—The Fun Starts at 7 O'Clock." Other copy along the same lines was used from time to time in various ways and places. A two months' pass took care of expenses attached to having a young fellow ballyhoo the idea on the streets. He wore a derby hat, tuxedo coat and striped pants. Copy on his back read: "Watch Armitage Theatre Next Week. ? ? ?" Pluggers were passed out as he pursued his route.

Borland's Cinderella Night appears to be a novel idea and one which could be successfully staged in a variety of city neighborhoods and towns. Thanks to him for passing along the campaign information. We are sure fellow members will benefit from his experience and possibly try it in their own houses.

Above is a reproduction of the advance lobby display fashioned for "I Am a Fugitive" by Jack Sanson, manager of the Roger Sherman Theatre, New Haven, Conn., which holds the distinction of being partially responsible for the best week's gross the house ever had. All objects such as chains, sweatbox, whip, etc., were accurate reproductions—not painted on lobby walls.

WAUGH'S CAMPAIGN!

Diversified Activities Keep Up Public's Interest in This Manager's New Attractions!

JUST when we were beginning to wonder at not hearing from our Memphis friend, Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre there, along comes a wealth of excellent material from Howard himself, who used all these stunts in putting over "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang" at his theatre. Here are a great many unusual gags that were pulled, which we're now passing along the line.

The Start-Off!

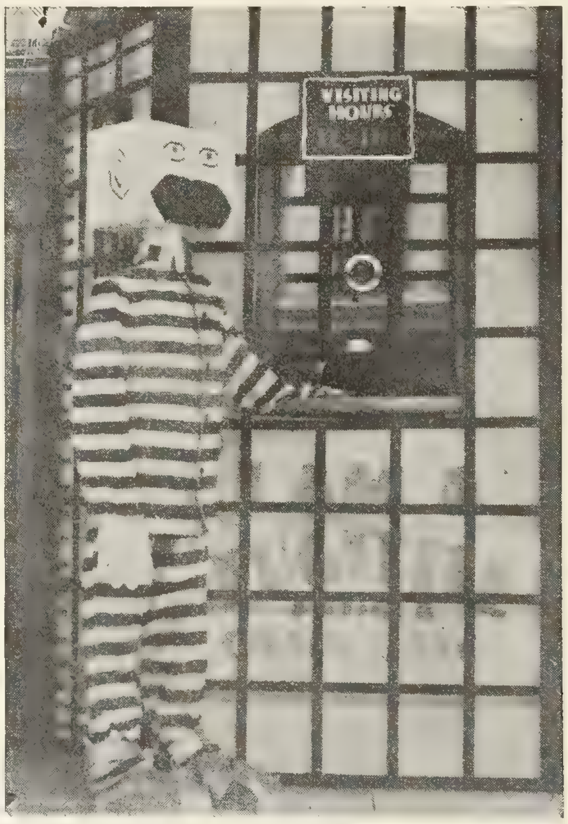
Waugh started his advance campaign with a 40x60 blow-up of a head of Paul Muni, which was placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre and attracted a notice in the local press; a special trailer which was used ten days before the picture opened; a display in the foyer of a whipping post, handcuffs and other chain prison items, which were borrowed from the county jail, and carried copy on the picture; a tie-up with a local chain store which netted the printing of "Fugitive" and theatre copy on 10,000 paper bags; and advance publicity stories placed with leading local papers.

The above was just a warm-up for the energetic Howard, who continued his smash advance campaign with the following excellent stunts: He arranged for the Cossitt Library's purchasing six copies of the "Fugitive" book for their shelves, and also the distribution of 30,000 book marks with copy on the picture. The library and its branches were also supplied with special display cards carrying stills and copy on the picture. Every possible spot in town was plastered with "Fugitive" display cards. The town was also well plastered with special one, two and three sheets. Street cars and taxi cabs carried signs announcing the "coming to the Warner Theatre of 'I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang.'" A large sign was placed on the theatre curtain for ten days in advance bearing copy on the "Fugitive" opening; 600 of the regular herald on the picture were furnished to a local laundry for insertion in all bundles. A special letter on the production was posted on the bulletin board of the American and Colored Legions. A local Hebrew publication carried a two column illustrated publicity story on the feature. Cards on the picture were placed in Krees' store windows. A local orchestra arranged a special medley of "I'm a Fugitive From Love" and "Prisoner's Song," dedicating same to picture—and broadcast the song from a local radio station. The Memphis Daily News carried a serialization of the story in six installments. A special advance ad campaign was used—modeled after the Warner merchandising plan of the picture.

Employed Sound Truck!

And Waugh didn't stop there! His next stunt was to send about town a sound truck which was bannered with advertising copy on the picture and had two men in prison uniforms sitting on top of it. A special essay contest was held for women, who were asked to tell which of the three romances was most important in the life of Robert Burns, author, of the story. A jig-saw puzzle was also planted in the newspapers, with contestants invited to shape together the cut-outs forming a head of Muni. A special screening was held for the press and invited guests. Two thousand heralds on the picture were distributed at the American Legion Wrestling matches.

A tremendous opening followed the above campaign, which was continued with many more similar stunts, throughout the picture's run. Waugh tied-up with a local coal company to give away a free bucket to every person buying a ton of coal. The coal people also took an ad in the paper announcing the giveaway, with the ad playing up copy on the picture.



Editorial Break, Too!

An editorial appeared in the Memphis Evening Appeal calling attention to the outstanding qualities of the picture and also to the fact that the chain gang abuses depicted in the film did not exist in Shelby County. Waugh also received a letter from the chairman of the Shelby County Commissioners, who thanked him for the privilege of seeing the picture and also mentioning the fact that such conditions did not exist in Shelby County.

On the opening day 100 cards were placed on the down-town telegraph poles, heralding the picture's showing at the Warner Theatre. One hundred linoleum mats, carrying stenciled copy on the picture, were place on sidewalks in prominent spots of the town.

An elaborate lobby was made to look like the outside of a prison, with excellent stills and copy on the picture all over the theatre front. "NOW" cards were placed on all street cars and taxi cabs. The local papers carried a special story on the fact that Clarence Darrow would intervene in the hope of getting a pardon for the "Fugitive" author, Robert E. Burns.

One of the most outstanding stunts that Waugh used was the getting up of a mechanical robot which was placed on the street in front of the theatre. The robot, dressed in prison garb, carried a wire connected with the stage operator from the cashier's booth, and prominent people who stopped in front of the theatre were spoken to and called by name. This stunt created an enormous amount of interest. The small photo shows the robot standing by the cashier's window.

The foregoing is typical of the campaigns waged by the "Old Colonel from Dixie" and it's always a safe bet that the ground has been well covered when the books are closed. We will hope to tell you more about his work this winter. What say, Howard?

BICYCLE PAGEANT OF CONERY'S CAUGHT ON WITH THEATRE FANS

Remember the bygone days of the bicycle craze, when cinder paths were built all over the country to accommodate thousands of enthusiasts? Well, these two-wheeled pushmobiles are still a very considerable part of method of transportation and Mitchell Conery, manager of the Kingston Theatre, Kingston, Pa., hit upon the novel idea of tying up with a local dealer for nothing less than a Bicycle Parade.

The dealer was very much pleased with the scheme and contributed one of the latest model wheels for a give-away and other suitable awards for the most novel costume worn by entrants. The wheel was given prominent foyer location in advance, in conjunction with trailer announcement, etc.

The day of the parade arrived and, headed by a couple of old tandem wheels discovered by the dealer, the novel spectacle wended its way through the principal streets of the city. Ages of entrants ranged all the way from two-year-old kids, dressed in unique costumes, to a veteran who knew how to put his bicycle through all the trick stunts. Two boys on wheels also carried a large banner which advertised the current attraction.

After the parade the wheels were all parked in a vacant lot near the theatre and cared for by an attendent while the awards were made during the matinee show. Incidentally, all who entered the theatre—even the entrants—were taxed the usual rate.

The stunt was so effective for all concerned, both from word-of-mouth publicity and local newspapers, that the merchant is now anxious to effect another tie-up with the theatre. That's the way to make them feel, Mitch, and more power to you for putting over this novel parade. Any other Club member who may consider staging a similar parade can easily find out all about the old time bicycle pageants from some of the older inhabitants. One of these affairs certainly ought to leave an impression in modern times.

GRADUATION SOON!

Most grammar schools, and many high schools, hold Graduation Exercises about the first of February. In preparation of this event theatres should go through their tickler files and see what June Graduation stunts or tie-ups can be used for the mid-winter break.

If, as in New York, this February first graduation is as important as the one in June, then by all means get behind it and work out something of box office advantage to your theatre.

Several houses in the New England states offer the theatre for the exercises because of the larger seating capacity. This slant has many worthwhile angles and does not interfere with regular performances. Special newspaper co-operative pages can be promoted to bolster up interest in the event and provide the local populace with something to talk about, especially the generosity of the theatre in making it possible for so many more people to attend.

Investigate the possibilities of the midwinter graduation and include it in your plans for increasing business or promoting goodwill.

PERSONALITY STUNT IS PROVING POPULAR IN BROOKLYN HOUSE

A personality analyst has proven a splendid exploitation angle for the Fox-Brooklyn Theatre, we are advised by Bud Gray. A copyrighted personality chart tying in movie stars is given patrons in conjunction with the analysis by the man in charge.

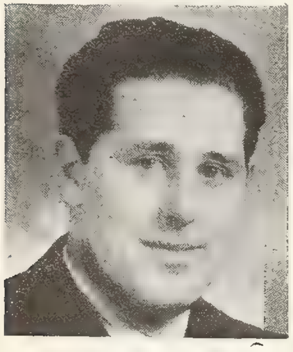
As part of the display for this stunt the chart is blown up to a 40x60 enlargement and placed where he operates, pointing out various features of the patrons undergoing analyzation. A trailer on the screen also announces his presence in the theatre. Gray states that interest displayed by men and women run about even, with a slight edge for the women. A small booklet giving a more elaborate analysis is also included at a very nominal price.

Casey Jones Tie-Up!

Mike Simmons, publicity director of Monogram Pictures, recently announced a deal he made with Munsey Publications to run a contest, "What Would You Do In Casey Jones' Place?" with prize awards, in connection with his company's forthcoming picture, "The Return of Casey Jones." The stunt will be featured in "Railroad Stories" and announced in a number of other Munsey publications.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

We can cut a lot of corners in explanation of why Edmond E. Gentes chose show-business for a career; he entered it just because he liked the game, and received his initiation at the door of the Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I. Later on he was promoted to assistant manager, and at the present, following transfer of his boss to a Boston house, holds down the job of manager.



Edmond E. Gentes

Gentes was born in Whitinville, Mass., June 14, 1908, and received his education in the Woonsocket High School and Sacred Heart College, St. Hyacinthe, Canada. He was twenty-four years old when the show-bug bit him, and as near as we can make out, I would again choose the theatre as a means of livelihood if he were to start all over again. He is married, a father, and a member of the Eagles, Sportsmen's Club and the organizer of the Woonsocket Rifle Club.

BUENOS AIRES FRONT!

FORESMAN FINDS A BIRTHDAY CLUB IS GOOD BOX OFFICE

The Birthday Club idea is being used to excellent advantage by Frank C. Foresman, manager of the Ritz Theatre, West Point, Miss. Those contemplating something along the same lines may find what they are looking for right here.

At the beginning of each school year he obtains a complete enrollment list, which, in his case, runs around 1,000, and has cards printed for filling out by the pupils. The teachers gladly cooperated with him in compilation of the list and assisted with distribution of the cards. As in other birthday gags, when the cards come out of the tickler file a certain number of pupils become entitled to free admission to the theatre. Foresman's list yields an average of about 18 birthdays per week and enables every child in school to attend a free show at least once a year.

Most of the work connected with one of these birthday clubs consists in getting up the list and arranging the names in a tickler file; after that has been done it's a simple matter to keep the ball rolling along. These lists, as Foresman points out, are also very helpful when organizing Mickey Mouse Clubs and kindred groups of youngsters. He has one of the Mickey clubs going now and obtained buttons for each member by tying up with one of the local merchants. Thanks to him for sending along a reminder of this effective method of stimulating good will among children and their parents. We'll be looking for further news from this Round Tabler.

The double truck cooperative ad reproduced here represents history in Palo Alto, Calif., as far as showbusiness is concerned. It was put over by Harry E. Browne, manager of the Stanford Theatre there and the first of its kind ever promoted in the city.

The "Trade at Home" idea was used mainly to promote the various ads and the mis-spelled word gag, spelling out the title "Prosperity," was employed to gain attention from the readers. Letters forming the title in mis-spelled words were scattered among the 22 ads and readers were invited to exercise their skill in assembling them, thereby participating in the awards and merchandise orders donated by the merchants. It is interesting to note that the Mayor issued a Proclamation for "Prosperity Week," which was reprinted on the co-op page. All copy, including the Mayor's letter, was written by Browne—an aid which was fully appreciated.

A corking piece of work on the part of Browne and all the more credit to him.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 155.—(A) To what is the increase or decrease of resistance in electric conductors proportional? (B) What is meant by "normal temperature," and for what is it used? (C) Just what does a "watt" represent? How is its value ascertained by calculation? (D) Describe the following terms: cycle, frequency, alternation. (E) Is there any difference between the terms "potential" and "polarity"?

Answer to Question No. 149

Bluebook School Question No. 149 was: (A) Examining Figure 4, Page 16, Volume 1 of your Bluebook, you will find "80" in the vertical column at the left. Just what does that 80 mean? (B) Examining the same figure: If the current it is used to illustrate is 60-cycle, just what does the numeral "2" on the horizontal line stand for? (C) Tell us exactly what two- and three-cycle current is and what advantages it possesses as applied to motors.

The following at least did well enough to convince me that they understand the matters included in the questions very well:

Dale Danielson, C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, William R. Lemke, W. Broadbent, F. Hanson and J. L. Hanson, H. D. Schofield, J. Cermak, S. G. Williams, H. B. Coates, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, C. Ray and T. Taylor, S. D. Love and W. Love, S. Maybe and R. D. Konley, R. Singleton, Nic Granby, J. Hendershor and L. G. Gregeson, H. Edwards, D. R. Peters and D. Holler, F. Harlor and G. Harrison, D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant, P. L. Davis, N. McGuire, H. Rogers, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, G. Tinlin, D. V. Peterson, J. B. Malley and M. D. Oleson, D. L. Mason, D. U. Granger, C. L. Cyrus and B. Olmsby, G. K. Berger, L. D. Simmons, D. Michelson, A. Bailey, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, D. L. Blinkendorfer, R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing, O. Albright, H. Pilson and T. L. Danielson, D. Singleton and J. B. Buckley, A. Breaston and D. Haber, F. L. Granby, A. Wells, K. Griener, W. S. Andrus, P. L. Day and P. K. Daniels, B. L. Banning and L. Jones, A. Ilns and P. L. Jensen, B. L. and H. D. Palmer, R. L. Mitchel, F. F. Franks, S. Howard and D. L. Kurts, D. Emmerson, A. R. Roseley, H. D. Tyler, D. Lalley and F. Ferguson, B. Jones and D. K. Ormie, J. Williams, D. L. Sinklow, T. M. Vinson, J. Daniels, G. Farmann, R. Wheeler and R. Schuler, O. L. Davis and R. Simms, L. D. Rubin and M. B. Grieg, L. M. Richards, M. L. George, M. H. Lonberger, T. McGruder, P. R. Fox, L. T. Tobey, G. H. Spencer, K. L. Hess, L. Grant and R. Geddings, D. D. Davis and L. Thomas, H. R. Baldwin, E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner, M. Henderson, D. Lambert, D. Little and J. H. Rathburn, K. L. Knight and M. Henderson.

As to Section A, I believe the answer of Dale Danielson cannot be much improved upon. He says:

"The vertical line represents voltage, and indirectly, amperage as well. At any point on the triangles above or below the horizontal line representing zero voltage, a horizontal line which passes through '80' on the vertical column would represent 80 volts. It would mean that at that point of the triangle the voltage had risen or dropped, dependent upon which side of the triangle we considered, to 80. The amperage would, of course, have increased or decreased accordingly."

Again I think I will explain that usually I rewrite the answers, to put them into better form for printing. Friend Danielson probably will not recognize this as his answer, but if he examines it closely he will find that his meaning has not in any degree been altered.

(B) W. Lemke, Rau and Evans, Lester Borst, T. Wentworth, Danielson, Doe Van Vaulkenburg and many others say, in slightly different words:

"The numeral '2' represents time. If the action of 60-cycle current is being illustrated, the time at that particular point would be 1/60 of a second, considered from the junction of the horizontal and vertical lines. It would represent the time elapsed during one complete cycle of 60-cycle current."

(C) I think perhaps Messrs. Rau and Evans have done at least as well as any one. They say:

"It is evident that an error has occurred. The question should read two- and three-phase current, instead of 'two- and three-cycle current. [Correct.—F. H. R.] Two-phase current consists of two distinct single-phase currents of equal frequency, but differing in phase by one quarter of a cycle. That is to say, when the voltage of one is at maximum value in a cycle, the other is at zero, and vice versa. This condition may be produced by two independent windings counted on one alternator, or by two single-phase alternators so coupled that they must be and must remain in exact phase. Where two-phase current is produced by a single alternator, the windings must be alike, have an equal number of turns and be displaced by an angle equal to one-quarter of a phase. If the current be produced by two coupled alternators, then the coupling must be such as will displace the coils of the two by 90 degrees.

"Three-phase current is three independent alternating currents so spaced that the periods of maximum and zero voltage is spaced by thirds. That is to say, considering any period of time equal to one cycle, say 1/60 of a second, there will be three equally spaced periods of maximum and zero voltage during that period. This may be accomplished in exactly the same manner as described for two-phase current, except that instead of two windings there are three, and instead of equal spacings the spacing is by thirds. Two-phase current, therefore, produces much less current pulsation than does single-phase, while three-phase reduces still less of that objectionable element.

"The reason two- or three-phase is superior to single-phase for use in motors is that it provides a more even pull—less pulsation. There is no dead period with either two- or three-phase current. Moreover, a polyphase motor is self-starting by reason of the rotating field produced by polyphase current. On the other hand, the single-phase motor must be brought up to speed by some substitute for the rotating field before the single-phase motor reciprocating field can be employed."

The Outstanding Chair Value of a Decade!

Quality

at a price the average theatre can now afford..

A prominent theatre owner, who operates a circuit of medium-sized theatres in the Southwest, is responsible for this unmatchable chair value. He suggested that we produce it. To use his own words: " . . . If you can build a chair like that to sell at a price the average theatre can afford, you've got the world licked!" . . . Well, we did and here it is! An attractively designed, sturdily constructed, well-proportioned theatre chair with a comfortable upholstered seat and a heavy ply-wood, form-curved and full reinforced back. . . . Never before was such an outstanding value offered the owner of the small and medium-sized theatre. Exhibitors who have heretofore considered upholstered seating beyond their means will welcome this opportunity to Reseat Correctly at surprisingly low cost. If you are interested in Reseating your theatre now—the best possible time to do it—by all means take a look at this New Model, No. 426, before you make a selection.

Observations

¶ As reflected in the pages of this publication, in those of the December 17th issue, and especially in these of the present one, Radio City stands out. From the windows of even a fairly tall building in Times Square, one can see, through New York's winter mists, the central spire of the Radio Corporation's new home rising yet higher above one. Nestling around, like little chicks, are those subsidiary theatrical enterprises, and they, at last formally placed in the laps of the public and the gods, get thousands of precious agate lines free as sheer and important news. After months and months of anticipation, the theatre world and even the public, were ready to experience the Music Hall and Roxy openings as a mighty climax. By this time these lovely theatres should be magnificently away upon definite careers. There is no gladness within this writer that they are not.

Time will iron the present disharmony all out, but meanwhile one awaits determination of just how the property may realize its brilliant dream.

¶ There is the Music Hall. To one professionally interested chiefly in the motion picture theatre, this theatre was of less importance than the Roxy. Yet I find myself regretting that the Music Hall is to become a motion picture theatre. Not because it was so designed that it could not be a fine one, for perhaps that isn't true. But because as a motion picture theatre it will not be able to realize the purposes for which it has been so ingeniously created.

The reason officially given for reversing the policies of the two houses is that the Roxy doesn't seat enough for the number of patrons who have been trying to see its initial bill, whereas the Music Hall's sea of seats have been conspicuously dotted with dark, ominous islands. Why keep those waiting to see the Roxy show from seeing it when there are plenty of seats just a block away? Admitting the sense in the obvious answer, one yet thinks of asking, "But will there be a time when the Roxy's 3,600 seats—a good many—shall be quite enough?" By that time, and it's likely to come, the Music Hall, unquestionably the world's most resourceful theatre for the arts of the stage, will have been established as the home of quite another kind of entertainment. And there will lie all the spacious splendor, the vast technical facilities painstakingly and expensively contrived to attract colorful gatherings, to give consummate expression to the high arts of the stage—there they still will be, unused.

In my disappointment, perhaps I'm a little impractical. Yet New York City has millions capable of appreciating the order of entertainment possible, if not yet presented, in the Music Hall. The immediate metropolitan area alone has a population of at least 10,000,000 while the commercial importance of the city draws other millions within its limits constantly. Max Reinhardt somehow manages to exhibit his productions in Berlin, an impoverished, worried city about the size of Chicago. Whether any kind of a show can attract, day in and day out and twice each day, as many people as the Music Hall can hold, is more than doubtful, but one dislikes to think that an American city, the largest city in the world located in the richest country, cannot appreciate the dance, the narrative pageant, the musical spectacle and similar forms of the theatre arts, sufficiently to support a theatre like the Music Hall.

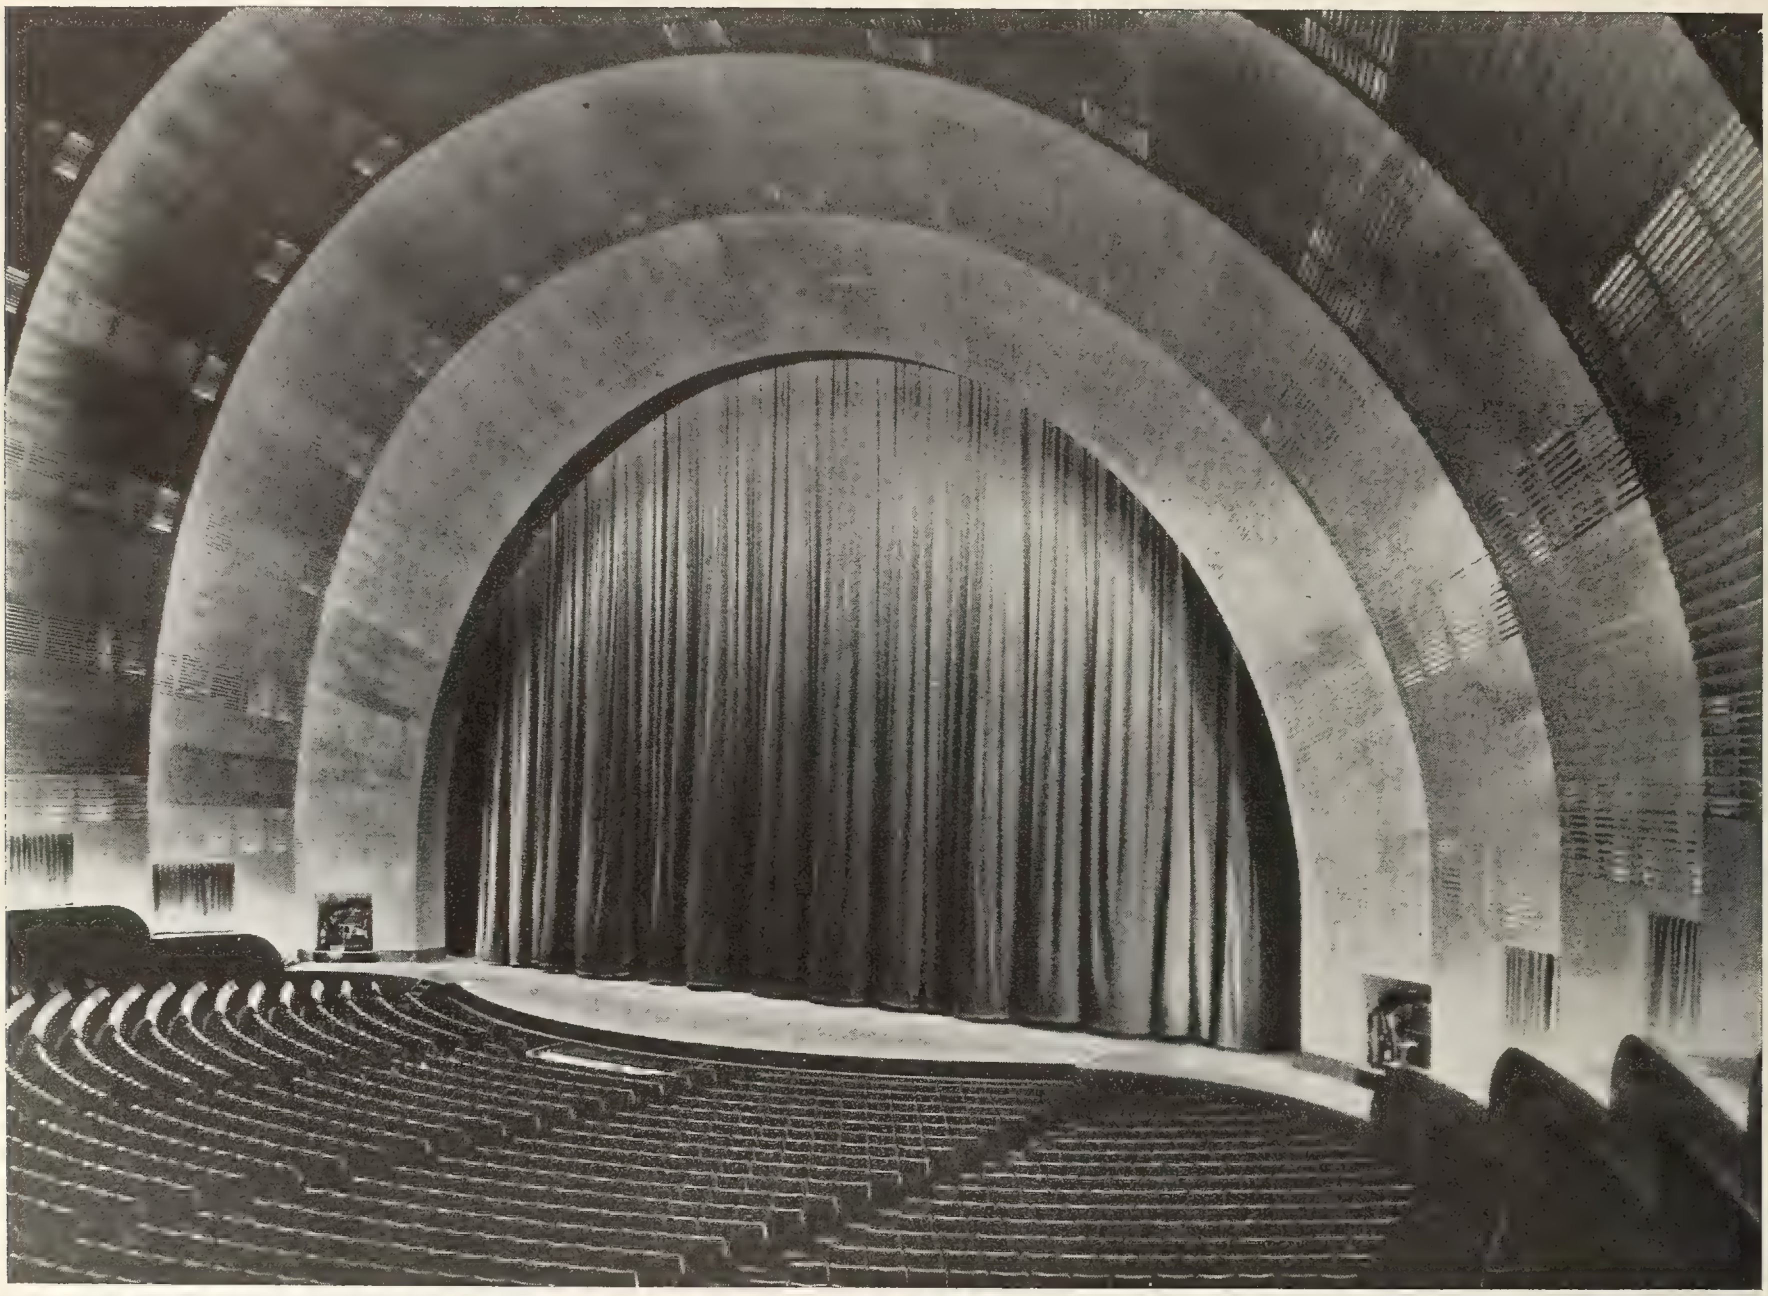
Perhaps, of course, there are some things about the Music Hall that tend to defeat its very original purposes. That infinite auditorium! Those remote, shelf-like mezzanines! But of these matters this publication will have something to say later on.

¶ Mr. Roy D. Chapin, Secretary of Commerce in Mr. Hoover's cabinet, has issued a statement "in response to requests for a statement of conditions at present and prospects for the future," wherein he takes heart in a new-found courage which he feels is all too often forgotten as we frown over mere statistics. More substantially Mr. Chapin discloses:

"We find one heartening factor in the existence of a tremendous latent or potential demand for commodities—a demand that is ready to exert its reinvigorating influence just as soon as an unmistakable rift in the economic clouds is seen. In the fields of 'capital goods,' we find that a great deal of industrial equipment has become obsolete. . . . Stocks of goods in retail stores have been materially reduced. . . . This condition cannot continue indefinitely. Buying will have to increase. . . . There is a comparable situation with respect to consumers. . . ."

¶ Well, it isn't much, but it is something, giving us a measure of assurance that the bottom actually has been reached and that we can either prepare to go up or adjust ourselves to the present level.

RADIO CITY THEATRES



Auditorium of the Music Hall looking toward the stage.

The Radio City Music Hall

● To the question most frequently asked following the recent opening of Radio City Music Hall, the largest of the two theatres in the Radio City portion of Rockefeller center, New York, its operators, Radio Keith Orpheum, has given an answer as surprising as it was abrupt. The question frequently took the form of, "It's a stunning place, but what are they going to do with it?" After a week or so of stage variety on the grand scale, the answer is that they are going to turn it into a motion picture theatre. It is this sudden change—quite a fundamental one to a consideration of the design of a theatre—that compels postponement of a comprehensive discussion of the Music Hall until it has actually become, in operation, a motion picture theatre.

This gargantuan playhouse was designed for stage productions, which in the brief period allowed them took for their general pattern, something from vaudeville, revue, extravaganza, ballet, opera and perhaps one or two other branches of theatrical amusement. Architecturally and technically, the Music Hall was designed to present just such kinds of performances, and how it will adapt itself to the motion picture is something yet to be determined.

Fortunately, projection facilities were provided, those of the Music Hall practically paralleling those of the original motion picture theatre, the RKO Roxy. [These formed the subject of F. H. Richardson's article, "Projection in Radio City," in the December 17th issue.—The Editor.] The stage of the Music Hall is a great deal wider than that of the Roxy. The screen size adopted is 70x40 feet.

Seating over 6,000, the Music Hall is rather awe-inspiring for its sheer immensity.

THE RKO ROXY THEATRE

By EUGENE CLUTE

Describing the house designed to be the motion picture theatre in Radio City. This installment concludes the article begun in the December 17, 1932, issue

Lighting and Ventilation Combined

IN THE LOUNGES, smoking rooms, powder rooms, and on the two grand staircases, as well as in the grand foyer and the auditorium, the lighting fixtures are all of strictly modern design, marked by dignity as well as originality. Frosted white glass combined with clear glass tubes and white metal is used in a great variety of ways and with recessed reflectors and cove strips, as well as in fixtures. The designs of many of these light sources can be seen in accompanying photographs. They are notable for the thoroughness with which the designs have been studied.

In most instances inlets for conditioned air are combined with the fixtures, as in the grand foyer, where the air is admitted through a space above a disc set close to the ceiling above the fixture. This is not noticeable because of the relative narrowness of the air space compared with the large size of the fixtures. The chandelier and mezzanine soffit lights in the auditorium are among the fixtures by Cox, Nostrand and Gunnison. The fixtures in the grand foyer lounges and powder and smoking rooms are parts of the great number by Walter Kantack & Company. The Robert Phillips Company made other of the important fixtures. The electrical installation through the Roxy was made by the E. J. Electrical Installation Company.

The means by which the conditioned air is circulated through the various rooms has been indicated in describing them. In general it is by downward ventilation from ceiling inlets often combined with the lighting fixtures. In the main lounge in the basement, air is both admitted and drawn out, while the adjoining women's lounge and men's lounge receive air from the main lounge, with which they are connected by wide doorways, and are provided with outlets through which the air is drawn out to the exhaust or to the conditioning apparatus. The men's lounge has, in addition, inlets for conditioned air. There is radiion treatment for removing odors and otherwise purifying the air, in addition to the other means, before re-circulating. The air conditioning apparatus is located in various parts of the building: fan rooms in the top level above the projection booth and in the sub-basement under the front of the auditorium; the refrigerating apparatus in the sub-basement; the cooling towers on the roof, architecturally treated. The filtering, dehumidifying and washing apparatus, etc., are all organized in a thoroughly co-ordinated system, by which the air in the building may be maintained at the required temperature, humidity and pressure, free from dust and odors throughout the year. The air conditioning is by Carrier.

Stage Facilities

A unique feature of the stage equipment, which is by Peter Clark, is a group of three elevators in the stage floor together occupying a floor area 50 feet wide by 28 feet deep. There is a turntable in the center of the stage formed by locking together three sections of the elevators. This may be revolved while the elevators are being raised or lowered together. When the turntable is not in use, the three elevators may be operated separately. They are of the screw type, motor driven. The orchestra pit elevator is also of the screw type and it carries a movable platform or band wagon that may be rolled off of this elevator onto the stage, over a trap covering the disappearing footlights.

There are six loud speakers for sound reproduction in connection with the motion picture program. Four of these are of unusual size, being 133¼ inches long by 79 inches square at the throat. The two smaller loud speakers are 63¼ inches long by 45 inches square at the throat. These units are supported in steel frames, four in one group and two in the other, which are hung from a monorail of steel I-beams 7 inches deep. The frames can be run from side to side of the stage on the I-beam as a track, and the monorail with the loud speakers can be drawn up into the upper part of the stage house. A very unusual feature is that the large directional baffles,

But size is hardly the only impressive thing about it. More flamboyant than the Roxy—perhaps one had better say, less subdued in its treatment—the Music Hall, like the Roxy, is yet designed and decorated in style and materials that are, in modern terms, authentic. Forms are based essentially on utility, while the materials have been selected for their technical adaptability, or for their own beauty, rather than as raw material out of which to fake something else. And this beauty, laid on as deeply as expansively, is true grandeur.

The auditorium is brililant without the aid of lavish decoration. Were it not for the location of the stage in theatrical fashion at one end, it would most resemble an area. Of the 6,200 seats (the capacity officially stated), approximately five-sixths are locate don the main floor. The relatively few seats left are distributed among three shallow mezzanines which unobtrusively hug the rear wall. The form of the auditorium was determined by acoustical considerations as well as the seating capacity desired, and pure decoration is merely elementary.

Vaulting from side to side, and closing in a little toward the proscenium, the ceiling leaves off abruptly at the stage, the opening being without the usual arch treatment, merely closed when no performances are in progress, by a mammoth curtain reaching from stage floor to the ceiling itself. The ceiling, curving downward, becomes itself the side walls, with the area just below it and the floor, occupied by stepped platforms with inward, curtained openings through which artists may enter into the very auditorium to perform upon these platforms or to proceed to the stage.

At the proscenium, with a slight attempt to suggest in paint the origin of a sunburst, the vast vaulted ceiling, executed in faintly tinted plaster, splays out and upward toward the rear, developed in the form of a series of widening arches, each arch stepped toward the stage. The steppings have the general effect of breaking up the sound, while their fascia serve as areas for sound-absorption and lighting coves. The house illumination emanates from within the fascia and from behind lateral rectangular grilles. This treatment constitutes, more incidentally than otherwise, the principal decoration.

The exterior depends for its main architectural interest upon the large masses of its design and the use of an effective system of color illumination. Architects were Reinhard & Hofmeister; Corbett, Harrison & MacMurray; and Hood & Fouilhoux.

because of their great length, are made to fold so that they may be drawn up into the flys without danger of fouling.

The covers of the disappearing stage footlights and of the disappearing cyclorama footlights, are mechanically operated and open and close at the touch of a button. The cover of the stage footlights is in two parts, hinged on opposite edges of the trough and so constructed that as the lights are raised into working position the front section of the cover is lowered again to the stage level, forming a part of the stage apron.

The special footlights (stage lighting is by Kliegl Brothers) for the cyclorama have selsyn control, and all units in both sets of footlights have colored glass filters of red, green, blue and amber. There is a cyclorama border light, and there are three effect machines projecting upon the cyclorama from the gridiron over the stage.

The equipment also includes portable spotlight towers and other arrangements of spotlights with some upon bridges at the sides of the stage, and others grouped above one another at the side of the proscenium opening. [A special discussion of the stage facilities was published in the August 27, 1932 issue. See also accompanying note on stage machinery and lighting.—The Editor.]

The Screens

● The screens of the Radio City theatres (Ortho-Krome, by the National Paper Process Company of New York) are of diffusion type with a surface especially treated for correction of the light spectrum within limits of average daylight stimulation. The designer, A. B. Hurley, states that he has made a surface diffusely reflecting about 90% of the incident light (unperforated surface). By means of a spectro-photometer, he measures the capacity of a surface for reflecting every wave length in the incident light regardless of the light source. Then knowing the radiant energy of the light source, he treats the screen base with a selected pigment absorbing part and reflecting part of the incident light, so that each unit of surface reflects a composite of light rays simulating average daylight.

Absorbing any preponderant yellow and red rays, this method accentuates the blue and green rays, and so on, seeking the condition for the eye most like that effected by daylight, it being Mr. Hurley's contention that greatest definition of the image is thus realized.

The screens in Radio City have fabric bases and are perforated.

Provision has been made for broadcasting from the theatre. Since a more satisfactory view of the stage than can be had from the rear of the auditorium of a large theatre is highly desirable in broadcasting, radio observation rooms have been incorporated, one at either side of the auditorium, with hinged panels in the walls a little towards the rear from the organ grilles at the first mezzanine level. This arrangement permits a close range view and, if desired, a microphone can be placed here for the use of an announcer viewing the performance through the port of one of these rooms. There is a microphone storage closet just back along the corridor from each of these observer's rooms. These booths are thoroughly sound-proofed, provisions including use of triple glass with dead air spaces between the panes in the port holes. There is a vestibule to each, and the inner doors are of special soundproof construction. At the level of the projection booth is the local control room for broadcasting, while the broadcasting battery room and other equipment spaces are in the tier above. Connections for microphones are provided in all parts of the auditorium, including the ceiling and in the grand foyer.

The Main Foyer

The curve of the rear wall of the auditorium bows outward into the main foyer, which extends upward through the first mezzanine level, the promenade of which is virtually a gallery over the back part of the auditorium, widening the upper portion of the grand foyer. The curved wall surface is of wood veneer on steel, constructed in the same way as the lining of the auditorium walls [See December 17, 1932 issue] but here the wood used is South American Bubinga, a rich brown wood that has a purple-red cast. This wall continues upward to form the parapet of the first mezzanine foyer and is capped by a plain coping of golden bronze that shows as a band about two inches deep along the top. Above the promenade rise great smooth cylindrical columns, which are lacquered in Chinese vermilion and finished with a narrow moulding in aluminum at the ceiling.

Four double doors in this wall connect the main foyer with the auditorium. They are covered with vermilion leather, repeating the color of the columns. They are studded at wide intervals with star- shaped ornaments of golden bronze and edged with the same material. Over each door, inlaid flush with the wood surface, is a figure design in silhouette, cut from steel, given a satiny black patine and inlaid with lines of silvery nickel-chrome steel. These silhouettes are all different. They are spirited in conception, rhythmical in line, modern in treatment. They were executed by Oscar B. Bach from drawings by René Chambellan and Oronzio Maldarelli. The lower part of the wall is pierced by flush grilles of fireproofed wood reinforced by steel angles back of the horizontal members.

The carpeting carries as its background the brown of the Bubinga wood, upon which is a pattern of tangent circles overlaid by a design of parallel zig-zag stripes in purple-black and rows of parallelograms in vermilion.

Directly opposite to the auditorium entrances in the grand foyer is a great rectangular expanse of frosted glass decorated in relief, which is divided into wide windows by relatively narrow sections of wall. In the lower part of some of these glass areas are exit doors. Wired glass on the outside provides protection to the windows. At the sides of these windows curtains of

The principal exterior decorations of the Music Hall consist of semi-lustrous natural finish aluminum spandrels, or vertical panels, to harmonize with the grey tones of the Indiana limestone. On the south, or 50th Street facade, are three immense plaques of metal and colored enamel, each 18 feet across, designed by Hildreth Meiere and executed by Oscar B. Bach. These represent the spirit of the theatrical arts, song, drama and the dance.

Radio City Music Hall has entrances from three thoroughfares—50th Street, Sixth Avenue, and 51st Street. Decorated hollow metal doors leading from these streets open into red and black imported Italian marble lobbies, equipped with nine ticket offices. Wide doors lead into the grand foyer, which is 140 feet long, 45 fet wide, and 60 feet high. The entire interior of the Radio City Music Hall was decorated under the supervision of Donald Deskey.

The wainscoting of the main foyer is of marble, the wall-coverings of henna-colored brocatelle. Gold wall-mirrors extend upward to the ceiling past three mezzanine floors. The dominant decorative note of the foyer is the Ezra Winter 60x30-foot mural, which follows a sweeping curve above the grand stairway leading up to the mezzanines. This mural, based on an Oregon Indian legend, shows the upward march of mankind toward the great golden mountain where the Author of Life dwells beside the Fountain of Eternal Youth.

The general lounge is in the basement level. There are 31 auxiliary rest and powder rooms, ornamented with modern art—paintings, murals of tile, bakelite and inlaid linoleum; statues of stone and metal; ceramics; bas-reliefs in cord; fabrics of rare design such as parchment, leather, cork, pigskin, aluminum and stainless steel; wall-coverings; furniture of chrome-plated steel and tube aluminum.

The art work of the Music Hall is prodigious. In the basement lounge is "The Phantasmagoria of the Theatre," a mural by Louis Bouche. In the men's smoking room on the same floor is a large abstract mural by Stuart Davis. In the women's smoking room on the same floor is a series of murals painted in white on white parchment by Witold Gordon, depicting a "History of Cosmetics." In the powder room adjoining is a fabric designed by Marguerita Mergentime. In the first mezzanine smoking room the walls are painted with decorative maps of the world by Witold Gordon. A black ceramic panther by Lawrence Tenney Stevens is in the same champagne-colored rough silk hang in straight folds, emphasizing the full 24 feet of height of the windows. Against the piers between the windows are light standards of smart design in gold-plated bronze, semi-mat black and satiny aluminium finishes, effectively combined. These are topped by multi-pointed star forms of gold-plated bronze.

The ceiling is painted a deep sky blue with a slight gloss, and from it hang chandeliers of combined glass and white metal. Some are hung close to the ceiling, lighting the first mezzanine level of the foyer and showing a recognition of it as a part of the main foyer. Others are hung lower, relieving any sense of excessive height at the narrower orchestra level. This arrangement contributes to the effect of the room as seen from the first mezzanine level. The fixtures hung closer to the ceiling consist in an illuminated central ball of frosted glass with ornamentation in relief, surrounded by pendants of clear glass tubes suspended on slender rods of white metal run down through their centers and terminated by crystal balls. Above the fixtures, on the ceiling, is a disc of mirror glass. Each of the longer fixtures consists in a huge sphere of frosted glass with relief ornament. These spheres are made of four sections held together by white metal clamps that form an ornamental part of the design. The stem is of white metal surrounded by tubes of clear glass. Above the fixtures is a white disc edged with silvery metal.

A color note that picks up the purple tinge in the Bubinga wood is seen in the plumcolored velvet upholstery of the low oblong benches. The vermilion of the columns and doors is repeated in the coat room, the interior of which is painted in this color. In a lobby near the entrance from the outer foyer are two elevators, the doors to which are of golden bronze, hand-engraved in figure designs in the shop of Oscar B. Bach.

Directly under the main foyer and reached by a wide stairway is the main lounge. The walls are covered with warm gray leather divided into 3-foot rectangular panels by red leather welting. Set in the long unbroken wall is a decoration by Arthur Crisp, executed in plaster with incised outlines and slightly modeled surfaces. Its basic coloring of warm grays, tans and buffs ties it in with the color of the leather wall covering, while its gold, vermilion and touches of other bright colors enliven it and makes it the focal point of the room decoration. The subject is Sport, and the design shows people joyously engaged in various popular athletic pastimes.

The carpeting here and on the stairs is the same in design and coloring as that in the grand foyer. The furniture, upholstered in vermilion leather, shows a combination of light-colored South American marnut wood with dark East Indian rosewood. There are tables of metal here with black bakelite tops and colored glass inlays. The furniture is arranged in intimate groups.

THE LOUNGES

Adjoining the main lounge are the women's and men's lounge. The feature of the former is Maurice Heaton's mural executed in vitreous glazes upon glass. The subject is Amelia Earhart's solo flight across the Atlantic and it is an envisionment of that achievement rather than a pictorial representation. The coloring combines orange browns, brown-toned wine color, soft greens and blues and gray buff, with lines of clear glass between to give crispness and sparkle. This panel is illuminated from the back and suggests a wide window. There is a recess in back

Stage Machinery and Lighting

● The stage of the Roxy has fast-working counterweight sets, light bridges, a permanent cyclorama, a turntable built into three separate elevators, and a movable band wagon on a console and orchestra lift. Stage equipment is by Peter Clark.

The cyclorama is constructed of a steel frame to which is attached a composition board and canvas covering. It is provided for an electric hoisting machine to lift it out of the way when not in use.

The stage is provided with three elevators. They cover a space on the stage 50 feet long by 28 feet wide, and occupy the center working space of the stage. A revolving stage, electrically operated by remote control, is built into the top of the stage elevators. This revolving stage is made in three sections and can be operated when the stage is either rising or descending. The electric drive which operates this turntable in either direction is located in the centre elevator and is operated by remote control from the stage manager's board.

The lighting of the stage proper, by Kliegl Brothers, is elaborate. The footlights are equipped with 100-watt lamps in individual reflectors for the amber, red and green colors, and with 150-watt lamps for the blue color. All lamps are arranged in two rows and constructed so as not to interfere with the sightline from the first rows. They are of the disappearing type and permit an unobstructed connection between the stage proper and the orchestra elevator when the latter is to be used as an addition to the stage.

The overhead lighting on the stage consists of six border lights equipped with four hundred and thirty 500-watt lamps divided into four colors and supplied with amber, red, green and blue heat-resisting, natural-colored glass screens in special frames.

Above the fifth border light an overhead bridge is suspended, equipped with twelve 2,000-watt spotlights and with two 150-ampere arc lamps. The side lighting is taken care of by eight 2,000-watt selsyn-controlled boomerang spotlights concealed in a recess on each side of the proscenium opening; and by six 2,000-watt portal spots on each side of the same type as the proscenium spots.

Remotely-operated selsyn-control Kliegl color-changing spotlights, a new development, are located in the main chandelier for lighting the orchestra and stage apron. Each of these spotlights is equipped with four movable color frames, operated by synchronous motors from the control board. The spotlights themselves are furnished with prefocus sockets and a new direct-draft ventilating system that insures cool operation.

Kliegl 140-ampere arc spotlights are located in the projection booth and on the stage light towers. They are equipped with the arc and color frame controls, and selsyn-operated blackout shutters, which are also controlled from the switchboard, which is of thermionic control type.

Announcement Sound System

● The sound equipment in the Roxy is divided into a Public Address System, a Rehearsal System, a Stage Manager's Call System, besides the Sound Projection System and headphone facilities for the hard-of-hearing.

The Public Address System is designed to pick up the sound from the stage and various parts of the theatre, using the high-velocity ribbon microphones recently developed by RCA-Victor. Sound waves reaching the ribbon vibrate it within the magnetic field set up by a magnet. The sensitivity of the velocity microphone is approximately two and one half times that of a condenser microphone generally used. This makes possible an increased operating range. The sound signals are picked up by microphones uniformly located throughout the stage area. The signal is sent through the proper amplifiers and distributed over the auditorium for sound reinforcing.

Approximately 30 microphones are located in the theatre orchestra, the platform, the stage footlights, the stage elevators, the gridirons above the stage, and the alcoves off stage. The output from every microphone is sent through a control console located in the rear of the house, above the third mezzanine.

The control room is so located as to make it possible for the operator to hear all sound in the auditorium instantly. The various microphones located on the stage at strategic points are wired to their respective microphone amplifiers, which are located either in the basement amplifying room or on the gridiron. From these two locations, each microphone signal is wired to its respective jack on the control console. By means of flexible leads having plug connections, any selection of microphones can be had, and full volume control of each individual microphone is obtained. There are 28 such microphone outlets available. Various groups of microphones work into a sub-master by means of which is mixed the combined outputs of any groups of microphones; then by means of a master control, there is full control over these combined outputs of all groups of microphones in use. In this way the various sounds emanating from the different microphones are combined and full control is had over them at all times by the operator at the control console.

All the rehearsing is done through a Rehearsal System, the stage director sitting in the twelfth row of the orchestra, before a specially constructed table where his microphone is located.

Through the Stage Manager's Call System it is possible for the stage manager speaking through a microphone located at the switchboard, to issue instructions and make calls to all of the various staff rooms.

of it with lamps below directing their light upon the cream-colored painted wall that reflects the light through the glass in a soft glow. Narrow panels of vertical glass rods at the sides are also illuminated and are given interest by irregular lines caused by the design upon the glass in back of them.

This decoration is reflected in a large mirror that covers the greater part of the opposite wall. The other walls are painted a chartreuse-lemon color. The carpeting has a blue background and an abstract design in gold, wine red, gray and tete de negre, with touches of vermilion recalling the color accent of the adjoining main lounge. At the entrance to this room is a silver sculpture, an abstraction of a shell form by Nogouchi. It has a black base and is supported upon a pedestal of mirrors with inlays of colored glass.

The powder room, which adjoins the women's lounge, has two walls covered with mirrors, each section flanked by dressing tables of glass built into triplex mirrors. Around the other walls a rich metallic fabric of silver and tete de negre is gathered at the top and allowed to hang full and free. The chairs and stools are upholstered in burnt-orange-corded silk. The tables and smoking stands are of silver-toned metal with black. The carpeting is continuous with that in the women's lounge.

The walls of the men's lounge are covered with photo-murals by Edward Steichen, made from photographs of aviation scenes. They are in black-and-white above a wainscoting of light colored wood with a black base. The furniture is of vermilion mahogany and Sucupira, upholstered in greenish blue leather. There are tables in silvery metal and black.

There are lounges also on the second and third mezzanine levels. In the former the chief decoration is a mural treatment designed by Hugo Gellert in the form of an enlarged motion picture film, carried up one end-wall across the ceiling and down the opposite wall. The designs are drawn in black with touches of vermilion on a ground of bright silver paper against the toned silver of the walls and ceiling. The symbolic figure decorations represent night and day. They are boldly conceived and executed. The dominant hue is blue, with which the furniture of Australian black wood and coca-bola contrasts. The carpeting is in blue and gray, the upholstery in gold and tones of blue. In the powder room here the wall covering shows a modern design in browns and green-blues woven into a silver-toned linen background. The furniture and upholstery and carpeting contribute blue, brown, tan red, burnt orange and jade green to the scheme.

The lounge adjoining the third mezzanine recalls the achievements of outstanding men of the Twentieth Century in simplified designs and abstractions, painted in vermilion on a silver-paper ground, toned down with a brown glaze excepting where bright silver is left for accent. Among the men represented are Peary, Byrd, Lindbergh, Eastman, Marconi and Muybridge.

The Lobbies

The entrance lobby, or vestibule, has walls entirely covered with bronze, the high dado being of shallow vertical flutes about 5 inches wide that catch the light effectively, and the frieze of sheet bronze being inlaid with black and red stripes of bakelite at its top and bottom and ornamented over the door and ticket booths with inlaid silhouettes of black bakelite. The figure designs are all different and were drawn by René Chambellan and Oronzio Maldarelli.

The main lobby, between the entrance lobby and the main foyer, has a high dado of warm-toned marble with a rough-textured, sand-colored wall, decorated above with a design of large leaf-sprays in gold, with grape clusters in black by Edward Trumbull. It extends through the first mezzanine level and has a large window into the promenade over the entrance to the grand foyer and a terraced feature with cascades over the entrance from the outer lobby.

The architectural feature of the exterior is the colossal decoration in repousse metal, representing electrical energy, radio and television. This is 42 feet wide and attached to the wall over the grand foyer windows, it was designed by the distinguished mural painter Hildreth Meiere and executed by Bach in a combination of nickel-chrome steel, aluminum, copper and bronze, insulated by a special process to prevent electrolysis.

It is notable in the decoration, that while there is great freshness of treatment there are none of the eccentricities that so often mar modern interior work. Especially to be commended is the success with which the various rooms have been united in a harmonious whole, while each has individuality of character. This has been achieved by such means as carrying the dominant color of one room into the scheme of an adjoining room as one of the lesser color notes, by use of the same carpeting or color of furniture or upholstery in adjoining rooms, etc. Much of the charm of these interiors is due to the mingling of any different colors used in combination; a dominant color, secondary color and others for relief and accent.

Features of Illumination System

● The lobby lighting fixtures are framed in 41 square coffers. Among features of the main foyer are a set of six giant globes made of cast moulded glass, three of which are close to the ceiling, and two are suspended by a slender rod. These globes, each of which measures 3 feet, 6 inches in diameter, are upheld only by a long thin rod of polished metal with clear glass tubular rods around the center suspension.

In developing the four large floor standards in the main foyer, the new General Electric tubular lamp, 34 inches long and giving out 100 watts of illumination, is employed. The ornamental base and center structure form decorative supports for the practical features, which conform to the other decorative elements in the space. The light sources of each of these standards consist of four of the tubular lamps, shielded from view by a narrow metal shield placed in front of the lamp.

Harmonizing with the fixtures in the main foyer and the stairways are those in the lounges and on the mezzanine levels. There are three fixtures on the ceiling of the three mezzanine lounges, each with the illuminating element concealed within carved glass cylinders and bowls. The fixtures are connected to the ceiling with louvre baffle plates for directing the currents of air. The lower side of the bottom plate is covered with engraved mirror glass, and from the outer rim of the plate are sustained clear glass tubes and balls.

The Amelia Earhart glass mural in the women's lounge is lighted through a series of strip reflectors on either side and at the bottom of the mural. Behind the mural, against the wall, is a serrated mirror whose purpose is to diffuse the reflector lights and break them up.

The auditorium lighting system has a central feature in a chandelier weighing six and a half tons. The central section is 30 feet in diameter, and a special ventilating system was designed to carry off the intense heat of its 400 floodlights and their lenses. The fixture burns 104,000 watts. The bowl is of metal, covered with cream and gold lacquer to harmonize with the general decorative scheme of the theatre. Rays from the chandelier can be blended to produce color schemes in red, blue, green or amber.

Supplementing the chandelier is a system of direct lighting accomplished with 200 beams of light shot down through 200 minute holes in the decorative ceiling, designed by Prof. S. R. McCandless of Yale, and executed by Kliegl Brothers.

Here and there are minor illumination fixtures, such as the mask wall brackets in the promenade and stair halls. The reflectors behind the masks are so formed that they direct the light over the desired area, and the position of the mask in front is such that the maximum amount of light is reflected. The masks are indicative rather than imitative of the human face, the surface of the metal being broken up into planes that not only model the face but also take advantage of the play of light and shade. There also are a number of stand lights, cylindrical in form and made of ground glass. The pedestals are of metal, silver in color with trimming in bronze. Other illumination features are the tall windows of the main foyer, which are of silver-toned Velvex glass (by Corning) and bathed in light from in back.

Because of the abrupt change made by Radio Keith Orpheum in the policy of the two Radio City theatres, making the Music Hall the motion picture theatre, instead of the RKO Roxy, a critical discussion of the Roxy scheduled for this issue has been eliminated, and an article of similar intention on the Music Hall will be published in the February 11th issue.

LATE COURT CASES AFFECTING THEATRES

By LEO T. PARKER

Reviewing recent litigations and analyzing their decisions with specific reference to the legal interests of the theatre

IN VIEW of the fact that in many instances the courts are apt to render judgment for heavy damages resulting from injury to a patron, it is advisable under all circumstances for theatre owners, managers and employes to exercise great care in discovering and remedying any defect which may result in injury to patrons.

For example, in Herschel v. Orpheum Theatre Company (48 S. W. [2d] 108), it was shown that a married woman attended a show at the Orpheum theatre, and after having seen the show, was attempting to leave the theatre when she tripped over a step and fell injuring her right knee.

As the immediate result of the fall the patron suffered a "skinned contussion" over the middle part of her knee. Presently a violent infection set up, which spread throughout the right leg and up to the abdominal cavity. She was taken to a hospital, where she underwent repeated surgical operations. Her condition became so desperate that blood transfusions were resorted to, to keep her from dying. She remained in the hospital eight months. During the greater portion of that time she suffered intense pain, being relieved only by opiates. As a result of the infection the bones of the right leg grew together at the knee, and the knee joint became permanently and rigidly fixed at an angle of 20 deg. The leg was shortened thereby to the extent of an inch and a half. In walking she found it necessary to elevate her heel and to place her weight on the forepart and the outside of her foot. She required the use of a cane.

The injured patron sued the theatre corporation for $50,000 damages. After considering all phases of the evidence the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the injured patron for $5,000 damages. The counsel for the injured patron appealed to the higher court for a new trial on the grounds that the award of $5,000 damages was inadequate. The counsel for the theatre corporation contended that the damages as allowed was sufficient to cover all injuries and experiences of the patron. The higher court allowed a new trial, and said:

"If the jury had assessed plaintiff's damages at twice the sum they did, their verdict could not have been held to be excessive; in ruling that the award made was inadequate, the trial court in effect ruled that it was contrary to the weight of evidence."

Patron Falls Down Stairway

IN ALL CASES involving liability of a theatre owner for injuries sustained by a patron, it is necessary that the latter prove conclusively that he was exercising ordinary care to protect himself against an injury, and that the injury actually resulted from negligence on the part of the theatre owner or his employes.

On the other hand, in order that the theatre owner may avoid liability for damages, he is bound to introduce evidence tending to show that under the same circumstances the average prudent and intelligent theatre patron would not have sustained an injury. Therefore, it is advisable for all theatre owners to provide ample illumination at dangerous places such as steps, stairways and the like.

For illustration, in the late case of State v. Haid (51 S. W. [2d] 1015), it was disclosed that a patron fell down a stairway and was severely injured. The patron filed suit against the proprietor to recover damages and introduced evidence showing that she had no opportunity to observe the stairway until she was practically at its entrance. Moreover, it was proved that lack of illumination and other defects at the stairway were important factors resulting in the patron's injury. In view of this testimony the higher court held the patron entitled to recover damages, and stated the following law:

"If she had been apprehensive of danger, and had proceeded with the caution such apprehension would ordinarily awaken, she doubtless would have seen the stairway in time to have avoided falling into it. It is true that the law requires a person to make ordinary use of his faculties to observe and avoid danger. But it is equally true that one is not required to look out for danger where there is no reason to apprehend any. It cannot be said as a matter of law, that the plaintiff here, in the circumstances in which she was placed, was not making ordinary use of her faculties—such use as an ordinarily prudent person would have made—at the time she fell."

Care to Discover Defects

AS PREVIOUSLY explained, the law has long been established that a theatre owner and his employes are required to exercise care to discover and remedy defects on the theatre premises which may result in injury to patrons. This point of the law was discussed by a higher court in the late case of Hartford v. Boston County (182 N. E. 476).

The facts of this case are that a patron slipped and fell as a result of stepping on frozen particles of ice on the floor. During the trial evidence was introduced showing that if the employes had exercised care and properly inspected the premises the ice would have been discovered and could have been removed, thus preventing injury to the patron. In view of this testimony the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the injured patron. The higher court upheld this verdict, and said:

"While there was no direct evidence as to when the ice formation first came into existence on the floor, from its character and the firmness of its attachment to the floor as described by witnesses, an inference by the jury was not unwarranted that it had been there a considerable time and long enough for the defendant's employes in the exercise of the degree of care . . . to have discovered and removed it."

Standard Contracts Held Void

CONSIDERABLE litigation has existed during the past few months with respect to the legality of what is known as standard exhibition contracts. The standard exhibition contract was one agreed to between leading film producers, under a compact that prevented the exhibitor from exhibiting the films of the producers, except after executing the contract.

This standard exhibition contract was tested for its legality in the United States court, where it was determined that that type of contract was illegal, in restraint of trade under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

A theatre operator who had signed a contract of this nature, refused to fulfill his obligations, and the producer filed suit contending that notwithstanding a section of the contract has been held invalid and void, still the contract should be divisible and the illegal section separable from the remainder of the contract, and that the furnishing of films, exhibition of the same, and the payment of the contract price therefor, is collateral and independent of any contractual provisions that are the basis of illegality. It is important to know that the higher court held the theatre operator not liable on the contract, and said:

"The fradulent and illegal elements permitting these contracts must, it seems to

MODERN PROJECTION

A PLAN DEVELOPED FOR A MODERN PROJECTION INSTALLATION

By HAROLD NYE

In Collaboration With Kenneth Belden

Describing the features of the electrical and mechanical scheme conceived for and adopted by Warner Pacific Coast theatres

THE DIFFERENCE in cost between a well-engineered job and an ordinary job is small, while the difference in appearance and operation is great. As all of the shows in even the larger suburban houses originate in the projection room, every precaution must be taken here, as well as in the presentation houses, to see that the electrical and mechanical projection facilities are as perfect as possible.

In the newer projection installations in Warner Pacific Coast theatres with which I have associated, exposed wire and conduit have been kept to an absolute minimum. In all of our projection rooms we have a 12x6-inch gutter in the front wall 2 inches up from the floor. This gutter extends completely across the projection room and has a barrier in the center, providing a 6x6-inch gutter for the direct current wiring, and a 6x6-inch gutter for the alternating current. The signal sections of the control panels are connected by flexible conduit, which is also completely concealed in this gutter. This conduit contains lead-covered cable for the signals and telephones. A sectional cover, flush with the finished plaster wall, covers both gutters.

A piece of 4x4-inch gutter is mounted under each projection machine, as shown at A, Figure 1. The flexible conduits lead into the end of this gutter from the front gutter wall. The lower large conduit contains the d.c. wiring, which includes the service to the arcs and the wires controlling the remote line and shunt contactors. The two smaller conduits contain the a.c. wiring, which includes service for the worklight douser and motor. These a.c. conduits continue inside the gutter and terminate in a 4x4 outlet box. From the box, one flexible conduit leads to the speed control box, and another feeds through the brace leg (B, Figure 1) into the cross gutter (C, Figure 1 and Figure 2). From here the douser wires lead through the bed rod to the front of the machine and up to the douser.

Some projectionists prefer to operate the dousers on d.c. for the sake of quietness, but in the newer Warner West Coast houses, they operate on a.c. because this is much easier on the momentary switches, and in case a douser does stick the projectionist can hear it buzz. On some of these larger jobs, operation of the dousers is through contactors on d.c., which makes a very good but more expensive installation.

The other a.c. wires feed through a flexible conduit from the cross gutter into the switch and meter panel (D, Figures 2 and 3). After going through the triplex switch, the a.c. service feeds the work light on the head of the machine, the light over the turntable and the framing light. The work light on the head (E, Figure 1) is of special flexible construction, while the one over the turntable is a stock major border light reflector with swivel mount, a diffusing lens and a 25-watt tubular lamp. The work light in the lamp house is operated by a door switch.

The flexible asbestos-covered arc leads are spliced to the rubber-covered wire in the lower gutter and are taken, together with the d.c. control wire, through a flexible conduit up one of the brace legs into the cross gutter. After going through the ammeter shunt in this gutter, the arc wires continue out of the gutter through metal bushings and into the lamp house to the arc. The d.c. contactor control wires, voltmeter and ammeter leads continue through a flexible conduit to the switch and meter panel (D, Figure 2). Care must be taken throughout to keep the a.c. and d.c. wiring separated. Barriers are placed in the gutter for this purpose.

The other two flexible conduits coming out of the front wall in Figure 1, are for the sound equipment.

SOUND EQUIPMENT

WHEN THE first Warner theatre was built, sound had just swept the country and most of the sound installations had been hastily thrown into existing theatres. Naturally enough, the Warner organization was particularly interested in developing and fostering permanent, workmanlike sound theatres. So we were given carte blanche and asked to create an installation that could be used as a model for theatre owners all over the country. In this work I was very fortunate in having as a colleague Mr. E. B. Olson, veteran projectionist and later chief projectionist for the Warner Pacific Coast houses.

One example of what can be done when you have the advantage of making a sound installation during the construction of the building is that the amplifiers, control cabinets, terminal boxes and filters can be mounted flush with the finished plaster and all wiring kept concealed. In all our installations the amplifier racks are built into the wall so that the rear is accessible from another room in which the sound generator and filters are located. The "B box" is also located in this room, instead of on the stage, as is the usual practice. This puts the horn field fuses where they are accessible to the operator. The horns fly with the screen and are fed from the gridiron through flexible cable. This eliminates the use of connectors.

The control panels (F. Figure 3) are of a little different construction than is usually employed. Each individual switch or pilot light has its own individual plate. These plates are smaller than a standard switch plate and are made of brass with a satin chromium plate finish. The use of this type of installation, using individual plates, greatly simplifies the making of additions or changes in the panel. This is important when equipment and methods are constantly changing as they are at present.

The clean-up lights (G, Figure 2) are made of chromium plated brass with opal glass and were designed by Mr. Olson.

WHY RADIO CITY SELECTED ORTHO-KROME SCREENS

After making a thorough test of the various sound screens on the market RKO-Radio City chose the Ortho-Krome screen because it is science's latest contribution to the art of sound motion picture. It is easy on the eyes because the surface is made to absorb all preponderance of harmful rays. It gives greater depth and perception to the projected picture and it eliminates the glare. It gives clear sound and tonal qualities. The Ortho-Krome screen has been designed to give better vision and sound. It is scientifically correct, as has been proven by thorough tests and approved by the Bell and Westinghouse laboratories and besides, received the endorsement of optical experts and other testing laboratories in the motion picture industry. It enjoys the distinction of being installed in many of the world's finest theatres. It gives the maximum distribution of light reflection at the minimum cost of power. It is guaranteed not to turn yellow with age. It makes possible the noiseless recording effects on any sound reproducing device in any theatre. It eliminates the problem of the side view angle to the greatest extent and makes it possible to fill the first few front rows and side seats without jeopardizing the good will of the patrons.

The reel-light (H, Figure 2) will reach anywhere in the room.

A double acting solenoid magnet has been mounted on the sound switching panel to operate the non-sync switch. This can be controlled at the non-sync table or at the control panel of any of the projectors and is operated from a 110-volt a.c. circuit.

VENTILATION

THE AIR supply for the projection rooms in all the houses is taken from house supply and is conditioned in this way. Two exhaust systems are used for each projection room. One duct connects to the grilles in the ceiling, as shown at I, Figure 2. This duct is connected to a sirocco blower, which is powered by a ½-h.p., single-phase 220-volt motor connected to the emergency lighting system. The other duct, to which the lamp houses are connected, is connected to a blower powered by a ½-h.p., 3-phase motor connected to the power service.

REMOTE CONTROL

REMOTE CONTROL for the arc circuit is used in the newer Warner theatres. When the first Warner installation was made knife switches were in vogue for controlling the arc circuit. This necessitated bringing large leads through these switches on the machines. One evil of this system was the burning of the switches due to arcing. So effort was made to develop an arc control which would enable the operator to get his "warm up" running by means of push buttons. Incidentally, this system enables the operator to control his arc current from any control panel in the projection room, as well as from the machine itself. The arc control circuit developed to accomplish this purpose is shown in the drawing (Figure 4).

From the d.c. buss in the switchboard the current is fed into a 200-ampere, fused 2-pole, mechanically locked contactor (K, Figure 4).This contractor is so constructed that it can be operated manually in case of failure in any part of the equipment. The coil current is taken off the line through a fused disconnect switch (L). This switch is located near the contactor and when it is open the contactor cannot be accidentally operated while re-fusing or working on the circuit.

The coils of the contactor are controlled through momentary switches (M) located on machine control panel (N), and also through momentary switches located in the front wall control panels (Figures 2 and 3).

One side of the d.c. line runs directly to the arc. The other side goes through the shunt contactor (O), the rheostat (P), and the ammeter shunt (Q), thence to the arc.

The rheostat employed is of the multiple coil type and has selector switches for both warm up and running current.

The running coils are thrown into the circuit with a single pole 200-ampere electrically locked contactor (O). The current for the coil of this contactor and the pilot lamps is taken from the line through the cut out (S), and the coil current is controlled with a momentary push button (T), located on the machine control panel. When this contactor is thrown on after the warm up period, it stays on until the line contactor is opened, when it is automatically restored to the open position.

The pilot lights (U) indicate that the line contactor (K) is closed. A pilot light is located on each of the front wall control panels.

The ammeter shunt (Q) is located in the cross gutter on the rear of the projector, while the ammeter is located on the machine control panel.

All motor circuits from the projection room panel board are fed through Westinghouse 15-ampere "nofuz" units.

Equipment News and Comment

PROJECTION EXPORTS

- Exports of American manufacturers of projector, lamp and sound equipment during the month of November, 1932, totalled 26 standard projecors, 78 narrow-gauge (less than 35-mm.) projectors, 17 arc lamp equipments, and sound equipment valued at $90,869. These figures have just been issued by the U. S. Department of Commerce.

The standard projectors exported were valued at $9,043, while the arc lamps had a value of $3,773. Great Britain was the biggest projector importer, taking six at home and six in British India. She also bought the most American arc lamps, importing seven, while France bought six.

France led in the purchase of sound equipment, so far as the value of the exports were concerned, her purchases amounting to $18,723. England followed with $14,085 worth, while British India paid $6,601. China bought $4,680 worth of American sound equipment

NEW MODEL SCREEN

- A seamless screen newly designed to obtain greater reflective power, has been developed by the Da-Lite Screen Company of Chicago. It is of a type adapted to all but extremely wide theatres.

This screen is made in standard size according to the new aperture sizes promulgated by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It can be made to order, however, in any other specified sizes.

AN AUTOMATIC CHECKER

- A device to count automatically the patrons entering a theatre has been marketed by the SOS Corporation of New York. It is known as the Photoelectric Counter.

The device consists of a miniature spotlight attached to one side of the entrance, and directly opposite, a photocell connected to a magnetic counter with an amplifier of proper gain and relay circuit. The spotlight directs a steady beam of light on the photocell. As the passerby intercepts this light beam, the caesium photocell is de-energized, which interrupts the current flowing through it and trips the relay switch, thus actuating the counter.

TWO AMPLIFIER MODELS

- An amplifier designed for installation in a theatre of 2,000 capacity, and for use with the Kolograph theatre model and semi-portable sound-on-film reproducers, has been put on the market by the Kolograph Company of Indianapolis. The amplifier is of all-electric, a.c., four-stage type, using one UY224, two UY227's, two UX250's, and two UX281's. It is designed to operate either one or two projectors and is equipped with a volume control, a changeover switch for switching from one projector machine to the other and also to turn off simultaneously one exciter lamp and turn on the other.

The amplifier is equipped with a voltage regulator, an ammeter, and can be supplied with a monitor speaker. When only one speaker is required, and no monitor is desired, the use of a d.c. speaker is recommended. In this case the field of the speaker is excited from the amplifier. However, when more than one speaker is desired a.c. speakers are recommended, with a monitor in addition. The head amplifier is incorporated in the main amplifier.

A smaller all-electric a.c. amplifier has also been marketed. This is of three-stage high-gain type especially designed for sound-on-film reproduction. The tubes used are one UY224, one UY227, two UY247's, and one UX280. This amplifier also supplies current for the photoelectric cell and the exciter lamp.

TWO NEW AMPLIFIERS

- Amplifiers newly designed for regular theatre and for portable operation have been put on the market by the Webster Electric Company of Racine, Wis.

The theatre model is of base type, with four stages operating on a.c., especially designed for sound-on-film. Wattage is 25, the gain 85 decibels at 1,000 cycles. Equipment includes a tone compensator, line voltage regulation, individual cell controls, current supply for either 4- or 7½-ampere lamp, variable input and output impedances, changeover switch and connections for microphone supply, while an ammeter is optional.

The other amplifier also has four stages and is capable of a gain of 77 decibels, while special units have been designed to increase this to 101 db. Two speakers can be supplied, with the field of 2,500-ohm resistance. A master volume control is mounted on the amplifier. Input and output impedances are variable.

EXPORTING METHODS

- Offices have been opened in New York by Amerika-Interessen, Inc., organized as the American unit of A. G. Fuer Amerika-Interessen of Berlin, Paris and London. A statement obtained from the New York office sets forth the purposes and methods as follows:

"Our method of operation is to make available to the manufacturers of one country, devices, processes and patents that have proved successful in other countries. For manufacturers who wish to obtain business abroad but cannot do so by exporting, we negotiate agreements covering production and marketing rights. This is done by issuing licenses on a royalty basis, or by the outright sale of the manufacturing and marketing rights for the country involved. In other words, we are endeavoring to replace the export of manufactured goods to some extent by bringing the inventive achievements, the engineering skill and manufacturing experience of one nation to another. There are no tariff barriers against such importation and exportation of ideas.."

NEW MAZDA BASE

- A new base design for the Mazda 2,000 watt, G-48 bulb projection or spotlight lamp, has been brought out by the Westinghouse Lamp Company of East Pittsburgh. This new base is built of metal parts attached by machine, replacing the use of cement. It has been designed to correct the reduction in the size of high wattage incandescent light sources and their tendency toward hotter operation.

The mechanical base consists of a ferrule of eraydo metal and a standard mogul base. The ferrule is placed inside the base and both are slipped over the neck of the bulb and then clamped into slight indentations moulded in the glass until a tight fit is obtained. One lead wire projects straight through the button of the base, and the other is turned up into a groove along the glass neck. After the base is clamped tight, the ends of the lead-wires are moulded to the base.

BY WAY OF NEWS

- R. H. Garrison, former general sales manager of the Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wis., has become associated with the Marble-Card Electric Company, manufacturers of motor-generators, in the capacity of vice president in charge of merchandise. Mr. Garrison received his earlier training with the General Electric Company and later joined the Universal Motor Company. The company is a member of the National Electric Manufacturers Association, and makes a complete line of a.c. motors up to 100 h.p., and d.c. motors up to 75 h.p.

F H Richardson

WHAT PROJECTIONISTS REALLY NEED TO KNOW

I RECEIVE frequent inquiries from young men preparing to enter the projection field asking for books which supply detailed instruction on various makes and models of projection equipment. Many of these young men ask me to give them advice as to what to study, particularly with relation to license examinations.

Men preparing to become projectionists will, in my opinion, do well to pay little attention to books giving detailed instructions on various makes and models of equipment. I shall in future editions of my own books ("The Bluebook of Projection") pay very little attention to such matters. In the earlier editions I did, for the reason that in those days not one of the many manufacturers gave anything like complete, detailed instructions on their own equipment models. Now nearly all of them do, though it is true many of them do not do the job very well.

The thing needed by the beginner (and by many who are not beginners) is elementary, basic instruction. They do not need to know just how to make the wheels go 'round so much as they need a basic understanding of exactly what makes them go 'round, and what exact purpose is served when they do.

The man, young or otherwise, who knows the why and wherefores of things is going to get along pretty well, because if he knows causes well and thoroughly he will be pretty well able to reason out effects. The man, for example, who merely knows that a sagged exciter lamp filament will not give good results, understands merely that when the filament sags it must be replaced. Insofar as concerns that particular thing, he may get along quite all right. However, such a man is not in nearly so good a position as the one who knows the whole story—the one who understands that the filament must be perfectly straight because of the fact that the best light emanates from the center of the filament, and since this light illuminates a very narrow, perfectly straight slit, the slit cannot be evenly illuminated throughout its length unless it and the filament center be in exact alignment.

The one chap works by rule, the other by rule plus accurate knowledge. Which is likely to be the better, more efficient workman? The wisdom of Solomon is not needed to answer that question. And so it is all the way through.

I, of course, do not mean to intimate that one must not thoroughly understand the equipment he is in charge of or working with. However, the projectionist of today may be called on to take charge of any one of a great many types and models of equipment. It is not humanly possible that he can learn them all by study. He can by study learn the basic principles upon which they all operate as a whole, and upon which each individual part of them operates. The projectionist having this knowledge, it becomes a relatively easy matter for him to master the peculiarities of any piece of equipment with the aid of the instructions put out by its manufacturer.

Don't be satisfied merely to know that an amplifier has certain tubes and the routine of their testing and replacement. That spells "machine operator." Learn how amplifier tubes operate. Know what each part of a tube is for, what its effect is on each other part and its effect upon the results produced. You are then in a position to handle any make of tubes in any make of equipment intelligently. You are in a position to get better results than the chap who merely knows the general routine of practical projection procedure.

As to examinations, those seeking to succeed in them should seek to acquire real knowledge of fundamentals and at least some practical experience in projection work, to the end that you may be able to answer questions out of your own knowledge. Don't try to bluff an examiner. If he knows his business, you can't do it. If he doesn't then the examination is worthless.

SOME DON'TS FOR PROJECTIONISTS

OF LATE there have been a number of lists of don'ts printed, the observance of which would be expected to improve results in picture and sound, as well as make for more economical work in various ways.

Most of these don'ts published are all very well. Some are excellent, but none of the lists is anywhere nearly complete. Not one of them contain some don'ts which may be considered as of paramount importance. For example, here are a few of them:

1. Don't fail to respect your profession and give to it the very best that is in you.
2. Don't fail to remember that really good work is the product of practical experience and study.
3. Don't fail to keep in mind the fact that the theatre management which employs you is entitled to the very best results that can be obtained from what they provide, and that the very best can only be obtained by close, constant attention and the application of expert knowledge, both theoretical and practical.
4. Don't imagine that because the management does not do its part in enabling you to keep the equipment in good repair it is not your duty to do everything possible to get the very best that can be got from the imperfect equipment.
5. Don't forget that if you are a member of a union you owe it to that union to deliver as nearly as is possible perfect results in both picture and sound.
6. Don't forget to remember that there are two points of paramount importance in projection work; namely, (a) to deliver results of the best possible excellence, and (b) to deliver them as economically as possible, both as to current consumption and as to equipment deterioration.
7. Don't overlook the fact that, either by carelessness or failure to apply expert technical and practical knowledge to your work you may cause deterioration in the amusement value of both picture and sound, and you have in effect cheated the management which employs you and the audience which failed to get full value.
8. Another don't: Don't fail for one moment imagine that poor work will not be felt by the box office—if the poor work be continued. Poor projection work for one show or one day might do no appreciable harm at the box office. Poor work constantly will! Patrons will not come so often. That's the answer.

SUITABLE PROJECTIONIST EXAMINATION QUESTIONS

A LARGE projectionist local, which requests that its name and location be not published, writes:

"Dear Brother Richardson: First of all a Merry Christmas and the wishes of this local for all the good things you want in 1933. This local believes it to be its duty to admit to future membership only men possessed of at least reasonable competency in projection. I have been instructed to ask that you suggest to the local just what sort of examination would be best suited to determine the matter of competency. We do not ask that you compile a list of questions, but rather that you advise us along what various lines the examination should be conducted.

"I am also instructed to express to you the appreciation of this local for the good work you are doing and always have done in your department, in your books and through the lectures you have given, two of them before this local, and to say that if ever you again come this way we shall feel honored to have yourself and daughter as our guests and once more listen to you talk, for while listening we have always learned."

Well, now, that is what I call a friendly letter, and if ever again I visit that section of the country, you may be sure I shall accept so kind an invitation, for both I and friend daughter well remember our most pleasant visit on former occasions.

I am real glad this examination question has been brought up just in this way, for the reason that many locals have not proceeded along the best lines in examinations. A projectionist is not a repair man, and the fact that he may be able to tear down a projector mechanism and reassemble it more or less properly, is no proof that he is not sadly lacking in projection knowledge. Also while there is no denying the danger of having a lot of half-baked incompetent near-projectionists outside the local, still it is cold fact that it is a bad thing to have them inside it. Unions need and should have the confidence and respect of employers, and that cannot possibly be if the employer is not convinced that the union as a whole is not composed of reliable, thoroughly competent projectionists.

To ascertain just how competent an applicant for membership in a projectionists' local may be, it is first important to determine exactly what practical experience he has in projection work. It is then almost equally important to find out to just what extent the practice has been backed up by competent study, because competency is always a combination of practical experience and study.

If admitted, the man will of course be called upon to handle electrical, optical, mechanical and magnetic equipment, none of which can possibly be made to deliver maximum results unless the man be possessed of competent knowledge of all these various things. He should also know something about acoustics.

It then becomes necessary to examine him at least as to his knowledge of (a) electrics, (b) optics, (c) mechanics, (d) magnetism. In electrics I would myself suggest the following:

Ability to measure and test voltage drop in a circuit. As to knowledge of Ohm's law, including ability to make calculations based upon it. To test for grounds. To describe proper maintenance and care of switches and fuses. To tell how to locate trouble when fuses blow out one after another, immediately or at intervals of time. To describe proper methods of care of motor-generators and of motors and other electrical equipment employed in projection.

In optics it is well to ascertain what the applicant knows about lens action. Why a lens bends a ray of light for example. Why a 5-inch focal length lens is a 5-inch focal length lens. What is meant by meniscus, bi-convex, plano-convex, compound lenses. Have him explain various effects of dirty lens surfaces. Have him explain effects of projection speed on flicker and why. Have him explain various possibilities for light loss in projector optical trains, including explanation of light loss effects set up by various projection distances, picture sizes remaining the same. And so on through a possibly long list.

In mechanics such questions should be asked as tend to show the knowledge of the proper lubrication of closely fitted, high-speed parts, of bearings and of gearing; questions relating to various projector adjustments; questions concerning damage done by undercut and worn sprockets; questions concerning attention to the path of the film through the projector, etc.

In magnetism the questions should concern uses of magnetism in dynamos and motors and in various sound equipments. The applicant should be asked to describe an amplifying tube and its action, a rectifier tube and its action, the exciter lamp and its optical system and the photocell, remembering always that much depends upon just how a man answers questions. Ordinarily, making due allowance for nervousness and poor ability to express oneself, one usually may judge pretty closely of a man's knowledge by the way he answers questions.

SHUTTER POSITION AND DIRTY FRAME LINES

IRA HARPER of Hurlock, Maryland, sends samples of film and says, "Here are samples taken from Reel No. 1, 'Pack Up Your Troubles,' an M-G-M production. The other clipping is from "Guilty As Hell," a Paramount production. Both show dirty frame lines, which carelessness may well be stopped.

"And now for two questions: First, can a film splice be made backwards? I was in a fairly large theatre recently. The projectionist told me his worst trouble was that the film received so many splices made backwards. I am myself very careful to scrape all emulsion off and scrape the back of the film as well. I use a film splicer on all patches and permit them to get thoroughly dry before rewinding on the film roll. I believe those I make will last as long as any other part of the film.

"Here is the procedure all film is put through before being threaded into any projector I have charge of. Don't know what you will think of it and would welcome your criticism and advice. I fold ordinary cheesecloth and fold it into two thicknesses. With this double thickness I grasp the film between thumb and first finger of the left hand. I then proceed to inspect the film by rewinding slowly from one reel to another, examining each splice, remaking it if faulty. I also trim any broken edges there may be. Have been following this procedure for about two years and find I have quite a lot less trouble.

"Of course, as the film is pulled through the cheesecloth, some of the oil and dirt gets itself wiped off. The process doesn't clean the film, but anyhow it helps. I change the cloth away as fast as it gets soiled. Have found it to be to my advantage to do these things, even though I don't get paid for it. Before I started it we had a good many shows stopped by film breakage, whereupon the manager had a bad habit of wanting to know why the stoppage. It is a way theatre managers have, don't you think?

"My other query is: How far should the rotating shutter be placed from the lens? My shutters are between lens and screen. They are two-bladers. Have seen shutters placed at different distances from the lens in other theatres. Am using Simplex projectors equipped with Peerless lamps which eat up from 18-20 amperes. Current is rectified a.c. Projection distance 56 feet. May state that your department has been a great help to me. May I express my thanks for all the information and aid I have had from it, and wish every success to the 'Bluebook School'."

This is a most interesting letter. It brings up matters we once gave a lot of attention to, though in the press of newer things they have been permitted to drop into the background.

First of all, a splice may be made backward. Holding film up the way it goes through the projector, all splices should be so made that when looking at the emulsion side the end of the film will not face the direction the film is traveling.

As to your method of examining and inspecting the film and friend manager's inquiries, there are two very different ways of looking at the matter. I have always held that when a manager or exhibitor arranges for film to be supplied his theatre, he automatically, without specific mention in the agreement, contracts for film free from mechanical faults and in good shape for projection. In other words, he and his projectionists have every moral and legal right to expect all splices to be in perfect condition, as the word "perfect" is ordinarily understood, and all broken sprocket holes, etc., removed or so trimmed that they may safely be used.

The term "mechanical faults" is not understood necessarily to include scratches, film cut-outs and other things which will not interfere with safe, continuous projection, though now that sound is with us cut-outs may no longer be tolerated because of the effect on the sound. In the old days when I was myself "twisting a crank" (the good right arm of the "operator" was then the projector motor), hurling the shadow forms of Mary Pickford, Florence Turner, et al, at the non-perforated screens of that day, I had exactly the same experience.

My answer to the manager's roar was to the effect that I was a projectionist ("operator" in that day), and while very willing to do every possible legitimate thing to put on the best show that could be put on with the things provided, I was not willing to and would not do my own work and the work of the film exchange inspector and repair girl, the latter free of charge. "If you," said I to the manager, "won't make the exchange give you what you are paying for, that is certainly no fault of mine. If you insist upon me doing inspection and repair work, all right. But I'm not going to do the exchange employees work for nothing. Pay me, take the amount out of your rental bill, and see what happens.

Summing up, the projectionist must, of course, inspect the films before projection, and he need raise no rumpus because some small repair is occasionally necessary. However, this should not average more than two such repairs to a whole production. There should really be none necessary.

And now as to your shutter. The distance the in-front-of-the-lens shutter should be from the lens depends upon the focal length of the lens. If your picture is not now abnormally small, your lens is quite short in focal length. Proceed as follows: With gate and fire shutter open and rotating shutter so set that the light beam passes through, project white light to the screen. Move some opaque thin thing, such as a sheet of cardboard, slowly down through the light beam at different distances from the lens until you see a shadow start both up and down on the screen, meeting finally in its center. Where the cardboard then is, is the right place for your shutter. Probably in your case the point will be very close to the lens. It may be even inside its barrel, in which case set the shutter as close to the lens as you can get it.

The only advantage of the correct shutter position is that at that point it is possible to reduce the shutter master blade to its lowest possible width. To find out how much to trim off, install a shutter blade made of cardboard, such as business cards are printed on. Such a shutter will run for an indefinite period. It needs no outer ring. Having installed and set this shutter, trim carefully from its master blade until faint travel ghost appears, both up and down. Remove the same and trim your metal blades both to the same width, less one-eighth of an inch on both sides of both blades. You will then have a shutter which will deliver all possible light to the screen.

MANUAL TICKET REGISTER

- A manual ticket register has been brought out by the General Register Corporation of New York, designed to issue tickets in the same manner as those electrically operated. The top plate of the two-unit machine has a width of $8\frac{5}{8}$ inches, and a depth of 12 inches, while the three-unit has a width of $15\frac{1}{8}$ inches, and a depth of 12 inches. It is also procurable in a one-unit model. Tickets are issued in multiples from one to five. Distribution is through the National Theatre Supply Company.

ELECTRIC TICKET REGISTER

- A motor-driven ticket register has been put on the market by the Standard Ticket Register Corporation of New York. The device issues from one to five tickets on each of the three ticket issue slides simultaneously. It can be operated either with the motor running continuously (which is recommended for busy hours), or with the motor starting and stopping with each depression of the key.

The keys of each unit can be locked separately so that any unit may be shut off. The cut-off shears are designed to prevent detached tickets from slipping back. The feed wheel is automatically locked when the machine is at rest and during the shearing operation. Between magazines there is storage space for an equal number of extra tickets. The magazine cabinet and top plate are locked by the same key. No tickets can be issued or removed from the cabinet when keys, top plate and cabinet are locked, making it unnecessary to remove tickets from the machine when it is not in use.

PIPE-VENTILATED MOTOR

- A new motor which can be used where a totally enclosed motor is desired has been brought out by the Ideal Electric & Manufacturing Company of Mansfield, Ohio. The device is marketed as a pipe-ventilated motor.

This product is a totally enclosed polyphase squirrel cage induction type, with ventilation supplied by a large centrifugal fan which draws cool clean air in at one end and discharges the warm air out the other. The air intake opening leads to any handy source of clean cool air, and the outlet opening may be left free to discharge into the room or may be piped outside if desired. The vent pipes are connected to the vent stacks.

The motors are supplied to meet all torque and inrush classifications for both squirrel cage and slip-ring induction motors from 1 to 200 h.p., including across-the-line start motors in all sizes up to 200 h.p. Unity and leading power factor induction motors are also furnished. Motors are for 2- or 3-phase, 25-, 30-, 50- or 60-cycle current, and all voltages up to 2,300. They are also made as 2-, 3- or 4-speed motors.

GEARED MOTORS

- Geared motors also have been marketed by the Ideal Electric and Manufacturing Company of Mansfield, Ohio, which have the gear reduction unit built integral with the motor. The high speed gear is mounted directly upon the motor shaft. These units are available in all gear ratios from 2.09 to 1, up to 376 to 1, giving output speeds of from 86.1 r.p.m. to 4.7 r.p.m., using the standard 1,800 r.p.m. motor supplies with the units.

For reduction ratios up to about 6 to 1, the reducer consists of a single-stage helical gear unit. For higher ratios up to and including 24.5 to 1, a two-stage helical gear reducer is used. For reduction ratios of 30, heliocentric gears give the required reduction.

All gears run in an oil bath and anti-friction ball or roller bearings are used thruout. The units employing heliocentric gears have the motor hung on the reducer. Other units have the reducer hung on the motor.

CAPACITOR-TRANSFORMERS

- A new line of capacitor-transformers for correcting low power factor in existing luminous-tube sign installations, has been brought out by the General Electric Company of New York. The new unit consists of a capacitor assembled with an air-cooled auto-transformer which steps up the supply voltage.

The capacitor-transformer is connected directly across the primary supply line. In direct current districts where rotary converters or dynamotors provide an alternating current supply for luminous tube signs, the capacitor-transformers permit an increased luminous-tube load on the converters.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

THE THEATRE CLUB here wants to build a small theatre for their work. Can stock plans be obtained for a theatre of 300 or 400 seating capacity?—E. G. T.

The Answer:

STOCK PLANS are not obtainable through this department. Besides they never would fit any given location or condition. If you care to, you may send to this department the sizes of your lot and we will very gladly give you advice and an estimate on such a building.

My best advice to you is to consult some reputable theatre architect, as by careful, economical planning, he will not only be able to save the architectural commission several times, but he will design you a theatre which will fulfill all your requirements. This would be absolutely impossible by use of stock plans.

The Question:

I AM thinking some of starting a small theatre, and I have a building in view that is made of brick and is 60 feet long, 20 feet wide and 12 feet high. These are the inside dimensions and everything has to go in that space.

If I allow 6 feet for the entrance, 8 feet for the booth, and 15 feet back from the screen, that leaves my auditorium only 31 feet, with an aisle in the center 2 feet, 6 inches wide. What width seats would you use and how many seats on a side would there be? Also total seating capacity?

Is 15 feet far enough from the screen? And what size picture would you advise for this size theatre? Or is this building altogether too small?—A. C. B.

The Answer:

I AM afraid that your building is entirely too small for theatre purposes, but I will take your suggestions into consideration.

If you want to place the projection room over the entrance doors, you may be able to do so by cutting into the roof of the front part of the building. The portholes for the projectors would be just below the auditorium ceiling.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

On each side of the entrances there would be some space available for rest rooms.

Fifteen feet from screen to first row of seats is not enough. Furthermore, you did not provide space for the horns, but I take it for granted that you have some space in the rear of your building to provide for them.

Let us take 8 feet for the entrance, and 22 feet for space between screen and first row of seats. This would leave 30 feet for seats. Figuring same 30 inches from back to back would give space for 12 rows of seats.

Most of the building codes do not allow any seats less than 20 inches in width, but in many cases special permission is given to use 19-inch seats. By using 19-inch seats, the largest amount you could get in a row would be 10. By making the width of the center aisle 3 feet (which is the minimum) you will have 3 inches of space between the wall and the arms of the seats. Having 12 rows, the total seating capacity would be 120 seats. The picture of course cannot be very large as the bottom of it should be at least 4 feet above the floor, so it could be hardly more than 7 feet in height. You may be able to lower the auditorium floor on an even pitch. This of course would give you better results.

The Question:

WILL YOU be kind enough to give me the following information? I own a theatre which was built about 30 years ago. It has a large balcony seating about 300, and a gallery seating 200. Both balcony and gallery are supported by two rows of four cast-iron columns each. The width of my house is 65 feet, but I want to remove both balconies and construct a new balcony with a seating capacity of 300. I do not want any columns under the balcony.

The outside walls are 17-inch brick. I am afraid they are not in a good enough condition to carry the load of such a heavy balcony. Can you suggest to me the cheapest way to construct such balcony and how much it will cost. The balconies are provided with regulation fire escapes on each side wall. The roof is supported by steel trusses and there are no columns on the gallery.—F. W. K.

The Answer:

YOUR PROBLEM is easily solved. Construct the balcony entirely independent of the building proper. You can do this by placing either steel or reinforced concrete columns along the walls to support the girders carrying the balcony. It would be well to anchor these columns to the present masonry walls.

Consult a reputable architect or engineer for designing this balcony construction. The cost of removing present balconies and constructing the new one would be around $3,500, provided no unforseen difficulties arise.

Several theatre building codes do not allow the remodeling of a balcony unless the theatre is fireproof. Therefore you may have to fireproof the ceiling over the auditorium. I advise you to take this matter up with the proper authorities so that you may avoid any disputes.

Late Court Cases Affecting Theatres

the court, taint and void the entire contract so far as it may affect or bind one who through the medium of coercion has become a party to it."

Right to Condemn Building

GENERALLY SPEAKING, municipal officials may not condemn a theatre building, or order the business closed, without showing a reasonable necessity for such order. For example, in Tebbetts v. McElroy (56 F. [2d] 621), without warning or notification, a city fire director and other city officials, when nearly 2,000 persons who had paid admissions were in their seats, peremptorily ordered the operator of the place of amusement to get the audience then in attendance out of the building within five minutes. The fire director threatened the theatre operator with arrest and imprisonment if he did not instantly comply with these directions. In holding this act illegal, the court said:

"The utmost of summary authority which any officer of any fire department ever has been given is to order the evacuation of a building when a fire already has begun. . . . But nowhere in the books do I find any reference to any legislative act which vests an administrative officer with authority to order immediate discontinuance of any lawful use of any building if only he imagines there might be in that building a fire at some future time. What a deadly weapon of oppression such a legislative act, if there were one, would be? If such a law could anywhere be found it would be no law, so plainly would it contravene the supreme law of the Constitution."

Forcefully Ejecting Patron

IN ORDER to avoid liability for forcefully ejecting a theatre patron, it is necessary that the theatre owner understand law previously decided by higher courts relating to this subject. Numerous courts have held that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for ejecting from his theatre a disorderly patron if it is shown that the latter was requested in a peaceful manner by the theatre owner or his authorized employes to leave the theatre and the patron refused to do so.

In other words, the law is well settled that a theatre owner or his authorized employes may forcefully eject a patron from the threatre if the latter is disorderly, or has disobeyed reasonable rules and regulations, and the theatre owner—or his employes—peacefully request the patron to leave the theatre and he refuses to do so. After the refusal the theatre owner or his employes may use the degree of force necessary to eject him without any liability.

On the other hand, it is well established that a theatre owner is liable in damages where the evidence indicates that an unusual or unnecessary degree of force is used in ejecting a theatre patron. This rule of the law is particularly applicable if the patron proves that he was assaulted, injured, arrested or otherwise humiliated without justification by an authorized employe of the theatre owner.

For illustration, in the recent case of Wineland v. Shaw (14 P. [2d] 226), it was shown that a private policeman named Schmuelback was employed by the owner of a motion picture theatre and authorized by him to eject disorderly patrons from the theatre and arrest them. In other words, Schmuelback's authority was not limited, but he had full authority to deal with patrons as he desired.

One night Schmuelback entered the toilet in the theatre building and accused a patron of smoking in it against the rules of the proprietor. The patron denied that he was smoking and an argument ensued during which Schmuelback violently assaulted him, throwing him against the wall of the building, violently striking him over the left eye with a large pistol, causing a severe wound, cursed and abused him, forced and dragged him out of the theatre into the street and placed him under arrest and imprisoned him in the city jail, charging him with drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Naturally this procedure drew the attention of numerous citizens to the fact that the patron was being arrested, subjecting him to ridicule, humiliation and disgrace.

The patron filed suit for damages against the theatre owner and proved that Schmuelback did not peacefully request him to leave, but immediately after denial that he was smoking in the toilet the argument began, during which Schmuelback roughly handled him and struck him on the head, afterward dragging him out of the theatre accusing him of being drunk and disorderly. During the trial the theatre owner failed to prove that the patron was intoxicated, or that his action justified the rough treatment and humiliation. Therefore, the jury rendered a verdict allowing the patron $500 damages. The theatre owner appealed to the higher court, contending that the amount of damages allowable was excessive and that the verdict was not justifiable. However, under the circumstances, the higher court upheld the lower court's decision, and said:

"It was in evidence and not disputed that the defendant Wineland (theatre owner) approved of Schmuelback's conduct, admitting that he had roughly used the patron and saying that the plaintiff deserved it and should have been killed. It was in evidence that the authority of the officer was not limited to ejecting disturbers from the theatre, but that the authority was to take them out and arrest them. . . . From a reading of the record it is our conclusion that the amount (damages) assessed was well within what a jury could conclude was a reasonable allowance for the assault, battery, indignity, abuse, imprisonment, humiliation and disgrace. . . . The wound inflicted caused a depression so deep that the doctor could not say whether there was a partial fracture of the skull or not, due to the fact that there is sufficient tissue at the place where the wound was inflicted to permit some depression without an actual fracture. We think that so far as the amount allowed is concerned, it was fair and reasonable."

It may be important for theatre owners to know that in this case the theatre owner may have avoided liability for damages if he had proved that Schmuelback was not authorized to eject disorderly theatre patrons. In other wards, an employer never is liable in damages for an act performed by an employe outside the scope of the employment.

For instance, in one case the court held a theatre owner not liable for an injury to a theatre patron inflicted by a theatre employe whose duty it was to clean the theatre. In this case the court explained that since the employe's sole authority was to clean the theatre, his employer could not be held liable for an injury inflicted on a patron because such act was completely outside the scope of the employment.

Obviously, theatre owners may avoid liability by giving explicit instructions to private policemen and other employes.

Official Liable on Contract

THE LAW is well established that a theatre official is personally liable on contracts signed for a theatre corporation, if the form of the signature fails to indicate that such signing was intended to bind the corporation.

For example, in the recent case of Pape, Inc. v. Finch (136 So. 496), suit was filed against the president and secretary of a corporation to collect payment of a promissory note for the sum of $17,500, payable on or before one year after date, with interest at the rate of 8% per annum from date. The note was signed, "Broad Albin Company, by Henry C. Finch, president, Millicent M. Finch, secretary."

In holding the officials not personally liable for payment of this note, the court took occasion to state the following important law:

"Where signatures of individuals appearing immediately under the name of a corporation on an instrument, and preceded by the word 'By,' and followed by the words 'President' and 'Secretary,' respectively, such words indicate that the parties signed in a representative capacity, and the individuals so signing are not liable on the instrument, if they were duly authorized."

Assessment Lien Prior to Mortgage Lien

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a tax lien is prior to all other liens, irrespective of which lien is first with regard to date. This rule of the law is applicable with respect to water, sewer and street assessment liens, as well as applicable to other tax liens.

For instance, in Federal v. Bissonnette (4 [2d] 364), it was disclosed that certain real property was assessed in the years 1920, 1921 and 1922 for payment of improvements to the water system in the city. A mortgage on the property was recorded in 1918 previous to the assessments. After several years the unpaid assessments depreciated the value of the mortgage and the holder of the mortgage contended that his mortgage lien was prior to the water assessments. However, the court held the water assessment liens prior to the mortgage, and stated the following important law:

"As a general rule, mere delay in asserting a right does not operate to bar its enforcement in equity unless its enforcement is barred by the statute of limitations. . . . Lapse of time is an important element, but it is not controlling. It is only one of the controlling and important factors, and the courts should give proper and due regard to the surrounding circumstances and the acts of the parties and their relationship to the property involved in the controversy. . . . At all times, then, appellant (holder of mortgage) was in position to adequately protect its own interests, either by paying off the amounts of the assessments and adding them to the amount secured by its mortgage, or by accelerating the maturity of its mortgage and foreclosing the same."

room. On the second mezzanine a women's powder room has painted wall decorations by Yasuo Quniyioshi. The men's smoking room on the same level has a wallpaper design, "Nicotine," painted on aluminum foil paper by Donald Deskey. On the top level a smoking room with leather walls has a sand fresco decoration by Buk Ulreich depicting the Wild West. On this level is also a women's powder room with a decoration by Henry Billings.

The stage is 144 feet wide and 80 feet deep. The stage proper consists of three elevators with a sectional revolving stage built in, so constructed that when the three stage elevators are locked together electrically, they travel as one elevator with the revolving stage working while the elevators are being sent up and down as one unit.

Directly in front of the stage proper is the orchestra elevator with a range of 30 feet below and 15 feet above stage level. This elevator carries on it a band car built to conform to the shape of the elevator, which can be run under the auditorium to a storage space built for it, or can travel at sub-basement level under the proscenium arch to a heavy steel and asbestos curtain which rises under the stage floor and allows the band car to run back onto any one of the three large stage elevators and be taken up to the stage or above it. The elevators are operated by hydraulic plungers and are controlled from the stage manager's board, with push button control, and indicators informing the control board operator of their position.

The contour curtain, designed by Ted Weidhass, is an interesting feature of the stage equipment. The curtain was conceived principally to eliminate the formal horizontal lines of the ascending drop curtains, so long used, and also to do away with the conventional draw, or so-called tableaux curtains. It can be arranged to open at many points, thus focusing attention on various characters or scenes on the stage. It is controlled by thirteen draw lines which operate by special motors, to block out certain parts or to reveal conspicuous incidents.

The cyclorama, a steel frame covered with composition pressed wood, measures 117 x 75 feet. It is raised by an electric hoisting machine to clear the rear projection booth so that the booth may be used for lighting effects. Disappearing footlights are operated by a motor drive and when level become part of the stage floor. (With the band car in use at the back stage, there is a flush stage from back wall to orchestra rail). The footlights may be revolved and a beam of light thrown to the top of the proscenium arch.

Two Wurlitzer organ consoles are set in niches at either side of the proscenium arch. They can be pushed forward on a runway at stage level, and when not in use, run back into niches and the openings covered by decorative curtains.

<<AN ENGINEERING SERVICE>>

The Kendell System Audio-Dynamics and YOUR Theatre

TRADE MARK

Exhibitors in every section of the country have expressed their interest in the Kendell System.

Naturally, every live-wire showman will want to know how this service will benefit his particular theatre—his box-office.

No doubt you have been asking yourself four logical questions: What is the Kendell System? What will it do for me? Where can I buy it? What will it cost?

And here are the answers:

Q: "What is the Kendell System?"

A: "The Kendell System of Audio-Dynamics is an engineering service which is applied to the back-stage sound reproducer equipment and its immediate surrounding area. It is designed and engineered to eliminate the existing dialogue deliverance deficiencies without the use of absorption materials of any kind in the auditorium proper. It further obviates the necessity of booth equipment changes to accommodate the newer forms of recording technique."

Q: "What will it do for me?"

A: "Primarily, it will sell more admissions for me through greater patron satisfaction and also through what is without a doubt the most comprehensive and complete press and ballyhoo campaign ever attempted by an engineering firm in the show business."

Q: "Where can I buy it?"

A: "From branch representation in sixteen important key cities, with district engineers in scores of others."

Q: "What will it cost?"

A: "That depends upon the seating capacity of my house. The minimum charge is $150.00. Over a period of more than three years, the cost has averaged 85.6% less than 'padding' and has performed better!"

That, Mr. Exhibitor, is the Kendell story.

Even though you conscientiously believe your present sound reproduction entirely satisfactory, make this simple test, which will cost you nothing nor obligate you in any way. Simply fill out the blank below and mail it to us. A Kendell engineer will survey your house acoustically, forwarding his findings to the home office, where a complete and scientifically-correct analysis will be made, which in turn will be submitted to you for your consideration.

Then, and only then, will you know for certain whether or not you need our service. May we serve you?

Motiograph Sound
$750 Up

Several years ago our engineers developed the Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment with one predominating aim in mind—to provide an equipment to the theatre owner that would eliminate that bugbear of expense "the service charge."

It is now a proven fact as our many hundred users will testify.

Our prices for 1933 are greatly reduced. However, I will not tolerate a let-down in Motiograph Quality. We have never built a cheap product and the new Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment represents the high standard of quality of my organization.

10 BEST!

Dear Critics of America:

Thanks for your continued approval. Trust me to justify your faith again when the final record of 1933 is written. Watch for Marie Dressler-Wallace Beery in "Tugboat Annie"—watch for "Hell Below". Watch for Joan Crawford in "Today We Live". Proudly we commend to you the Barrymores in "Rasputin and the Empress". Those are just a few of many to come from M-G-M. Believe us, we are thrilled at the news of the nation-wide M-G-M landslide.

We will keep the faith!

JAN 20 1933

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 110, No. 4

January 21, 1933

A LA MINSKY

AN effort to earn a questionable dollar out of motion pictures is revealed in a subject called "This Naked Age," which was given test engagements recently at the Crescent theatre (Publix), Perth Amboy, N. J., and the Strand theatre (Publix), Stamford, Conn. The picture assumes to be an account of the cult of Nudism. Actually it is an exceedingly dull and uninteresting depiction of a lot of nude persons which, of course, has no reason for existence other than to make a pornographic appeal at the box office.

It is presented by a concern styled Vision Pictures, the principal factor of which is George Dembow, who has discreetly left his name off the main title. The picture was recently refused a permit for exhibition in New York State.

The subject is narrative and not dramatic and partakes of the nature of a newsreel with a descriptive voice. It undertakes to explain and exhibit Nudism as practiced at various Nudist camps in the United States, France and Germany. Large numbers of apparently feeble-minded Nudists—men, women and children—are given pitiless exposure, appearing not unlike forlorn sheep being driven to the shearer's blade. Looked at as a motion picture, it is almost depressingly sad. As a trick, however, to make expedient the exposure of nude bodies of men and women it probably is looked upon by its originator as nothing short of inspiration.

As a theatre attraction it has the same possibilities as the strip dancers of Minsky burlesque.

Any exhibitor who shows this picture is committing an act which is certain to bring disgrace and disgust upon the screen, his community and his profession.

TOTALLY UNNECESSARY

MR. GILBERT SELDES, a word-monger variously serving the New Republic-Dial sector and the lowbrow pink daily market, and all too often a commentator on the motion picture, lays bare his obfuscated mental processes in the current issue of Americana, incidentally in the course of a discussion of the matter of that same nudist film entitled "This Naked Age." Says Mr. Seldes:

"It seems to me extraordinary that the fight against censorship is perpetually being carried on by artists, the very people who know best that censorship is necessary. They will read a manuscript and say, 'It's good but it ought to be cut.' They will object to sculpture because it sprawls, to painting because it is not compact enough, to a play because it lacks concision. On the ground of art they are all for cutting, except when the subject touches on sex, when they bawl and cry like babies whose candies have been taken away."

What makes us bawl and cry at the moment is that Mr. Seldes can be accepted for publication when he is so obtuse that he does not distinguish between the processes of criticism and censorship. The criticism of art by artists is within the creative world of art, a form of collaboration. Censorship in the only permissible meaning of the word is the application of an external suppressive force in nowise concerned with creation or with anything save the service of the mores for which the censor stands.

These paragraphs of comment, for example, are not expressions toward censorship of Mr. Seldes. They constitute critical comment of a writer who feels that Mr. Seldes writes before he thinks. Our civilization suffers vastly from the very large array of persons who have a typewriter and some space to fill, and no other provocation.

TODAY'S REPUTATION

WHATEVER the state of our art and industry is now and today a very considerable proportion of the customers are accepting it as the best the motion picture can do. The statistical department of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company calculates that each year 1,185,395 girls and 1,181,920 boys arrive at the significant, determined, independent age of sixteen. That's a total of 2,367,315 grade A customers of the motion picture per year and it means that about seven millions of them have thus arrived in the depression years. Their state of mind and attitude as consumers are die stamped with the skeptical caution of the years of ordeal. Selling the motion picture is likely to be rather more of a job from here onward. Once upon a time motion pictures were so good that exhibitors begged exchangemen for service and the only selling task of showmanship was the posting of a one-sheet in front of the nickelodeon. The admission was a nickel—and worth it. That was the depression year of 1907, but the motion picture, the world's best buy at the price, went prospering through.

OZAKI GOES SMILING THROUGH

EVERY spring the newsreels bring us the tidings of the cherry blossoms that rim the Potomac basin in Washington. The Japanese blossoms have been made a national institution by the motion picture. So for us there is strange grim drama in the news that the aged Yukio Ozaki, who so many years ago gave us the cherry trees as a poetic gesture of good will, is now on the seas bound home from England to show warlike Japan how a pacifist can die for his convictions. Having been promised death by assassination, he goes forth to meet it—before the cherries bloom again.

1913 when Jesse L. Lasky began his career as a producer—a year celebrated in this timely interview on

by Leo Meehan

TWENTY years this month in the motion picture business, and starting again from scratch, according to his own statement. This is the situation of Jesse L. Lasky, one of the real pioneers, who is now a producer for Fox after one of the most eventful and important careers connected with the development of feature motion pictures as they exist today. At a luncheon tendered in his honor and celebrating his 20th anniversary in pictures, held at the Fox studios the other day, Mr. Lasky in a whimsical vein referred to his "story" as "the rise and fall and—I hope—the rise again of Jesse Lasky."

Later in the day I sat for half an hour with Mr. Lasky in his quiet office while he looked backward—and forward. He looked out across the green Westwood Hills to shimmering Santa Monica bay, reflecting the pastel shades of a winter sunset on the tropical Pacific. Somehow, this very setting seemed to typify the change in Mr. Lasky's viewpoint as he expressed it to me.

"This is the show business," he said, "and the show business always has and always will be a business of close personal contacts and applications. You just saw Elissa Landi go out of my office as you came in. I talked with her for half an hour about the part I propose to have her play in my next picture, 'Warrior's Husband.' She went out enthused, eager to be at it; and I am enthused about her for the part. We are proposing to do a job together, and both of us have our hearts and souls in it now. Just before she was here I had a long talk with Marjorie Rambeau, who was not at all certain she could do the role I wanted her for, or that she wanted to do it. But when we talked it over—well, before we were through she was up on her feet showing me how she could do it, saying, 'That's what we want, Mr. Lasky!'

He recalled the days in New York when he was chief of Paramount's production, setting behind a desk high in a New York skyscraper. "What could I do except generalize and formularize when we had 60 or 70 or even up to 100 pictures to produce in a year, So many melodramas, so many Westerns, so many romantic pictures—so many at $250,000, this one to be a special costing a million or more.

And then Mr. Lasky said a very important thing. Declaring that he did not believe that the mass production idea could be continued, expressing his belief that it was "industrialism" that did not fit into the show business, he used the word which he believes best describes what he is now doing, happily and enthusiastically, and which he beleives the picture production business must do very largely in order to re-establish itself.

"We must have intimacy in production," he declared. "We have been talking about 'independent production,' but I believe that word 'independent' is rather a misnomer. It does not properly express what we really are striving for. It is 'intimate production' that we must get back to. All those concerned with a production, from the boss down to the common laborer, must be associated intimately, must be intimately, understandingly concerned with its progress. That is the secret of success in the show business, I believe. We lost much of it when we became industrialized, tried to grow bigger and bigger.

"Out there in another room a writer is working on a script for me. Suddenly he is seized with what he thinks is a great idea. He wants to tell me about it immediately. Here, as I am now situated, he can see me at once. He comes in while he is all steamed up, imparts to me some of his enthusiasm. We discuss the idea at length together, modifying, adding, milking it for all it is worth. Or, on the other hand, if we find it does not fit in, it is rejected only after we are agreed that it should be. No hard feelings. Had I been a production executive in the old spot, and the writer had asked to see me, perhaps he would have had to wait until tomorrow, or longer, before I could give him a brief appointment. By that time his conceptive enthusiasm might have cooled—or died altogether. The production executive, busy with many other things, might have only a sketchy comprehension of what he was talking about, or no idea at all. And what might have been a great idea could have died aborning. This way, if there is anything worth while, it comes to me now, while it is hot."

I asked him for his opinions about the economic aspects of the present problems. He links them with the artistic.

"Production costs must be curtailed. There is no doubt about that," he said. "But at the same time production quality must be constantly improved. And that makes the problem more complicated. We face the fact that no matter how good a picture may be, there are fewer people who have the money to go and see it, no matter how much they may wish to."

In walked one of Mr. Lasky's production assistants. The daily rushes were ready, he wanted Mr. Lasky to see them at once, to get his approval before shooting on that particular set was finished. So Mr. Lasky stepped across the hall into the projection room without delay. Within the hour the boss knew what he had, what he needed, if anything. He was practicing the intimacy which he preached.

SPREAD OF PRICE CUTTING VOGUE PRESENTS PROBLEM TO LEADERS

Reductions of 10 to 50 Per Cent Already Made and End Is Not Yet; Parallel in Legitimate Theatre

Distributors, Fearing Negative Effect on Rentals, Prepare Countermove by Raising Minimum Contract Clauses

Admission receipts, generally, at theatres throughout the country have taken a sudden and unexpected spurt upward since January 1. They have increased to an extent even beyond the anticipations of many circuit executives in New York, it was learned this week.

The favorable reports on box-office intake which in recent days have been emanating from all parts of the country have been held closely by the executives at home offices because, being unable to ascertain definite reasons for these increases, they feel they have no grounds for knowing whether the situation will continue. The status of general business conditions has not changed, it was said.

Theatre circuits and independent exhibitors throughout the country have embarked upon box office price-cutting policies unprecedented in the history of the industry. At the same time, many legitimate theatres on Broadway are following their example.

The movement really began about six months ago, but in recent weeks it has gained such momentum that leaders of the industry now view the situation with alarm. Fearing a direct adverse effect on rentals, distributors are preparing to launch an attempt to halt the practice through higher minimum clauses in 1933-34 exhibition contracts.

Cuts ranging from 10 per cent to 50 per cent have been made and there are no assurances that the movement will not carry retail prices further downward. With box-office receipts for the country lower, proportionately, than ever before, exhibitors appear to have resorted to the drastic reductions as a stimulant. They felt that they had tried everything else.

Wonder Where It Will End

Exhibitors in many localities are still wondering, however, after three or four weeks of intensive hacking and chopping of admission scales, setbacks of policy changes, public reaction, and the general situation, what the result of the experiment will be, and why it ever was started in the first place. Many are looking forward to inauguration of flexible admissions as the solution.

In numerous territories, independent exhibitors have been forced to follow circuits in admission reductions as a protective measure. In other cases, the independents started the ball rolling.

An outstanding example of cutting is seen in Buffalo where the Shea Buffalo, partly owned by Paramount, has cut its prices twice in two weeks, starting with a 75-cent top, then coming down to 65 cents, plus tax, and now to 55 cents, tax included. The minimum price at this house remains at 30 cents.

In the field of the legitimate stage "there is no organization powerful enough to set a minimum price scale and then enforce it," said Dr. Henry Moskowitz, advisor to the League of New York Theatres, Inc., after a meeting last week. The league, comprised of producers, managers and actor managers, decided the price-cutting was inevitable in that field, but that the league could not take action because it had not official power of control.

"Every man is entitled to ask any price he thinks his show can draw," said Brock Pemberton, producer.

The tendency among New York theatres, however, has been a more or less drastic reduction in prices. Notable among these, "Another Language," with a year's run to its credit, has cut its admission for its last two weeks on Broadway to a $1.50 top for evenings and Saturday matinees. "Walk a Little Faster," Beatrice Lillie revue, has been cut from $4.40 to $2.75, and "Gay Divorce," starring Fred Astaire, is at $3.30 from a $4.40 top. "The DuBarry," musical extravaganza, and "Flying Colors," all-star revue, are down to $2.50 and $2.20, respectively. Max Gordon, producer of "Flying Colors," reports that his show actually runs 10 minutes longer than it did before prices were cut, due to applause and encores. "The company gives a much better performance, playing to full houses and friendly people," he said. "Incidentally, a great deal of the sophisticated material that pleased the $4.40 audiences falls very flat now, but the broader humor that did not appeal to first-nighters gets a big reception."

Apropos of Mr. Gordon's last remark, Herman Shumlin, producer of the stage play, "Grand Hotel," believes that it is quite impossible to offer the theatre public at lower prices the same quality of shows it has received during the last decade, but he is convinced price revisions must be made to keep the stage alive.

This, then, is the situation in the field of the legitimate theatre, while in the motion picture industry, large circuits are lowering admission prices, and independent exhibitors are forced to follow the lead. In several situations, however, the independents have been first with the lower rates.

Price Cut in Half

"Kansas City's Greatest Amusement Value!" Thus screamed 3,500 street car and window cards in the Missouri city last week when Loew's, Inc., announced a virtual 50 per cent reduction in admission prices at the 4,000-seat Midland theatre. The announcement, bringing prices down to a 25-cent top at all times, turned the situation upside down there. The consensus was that other first-run houses would make radical changes as a protective measure, and, sure enough, the day after the Loew's slash, RKO reinstated its stage shows at the Mainstreet and kept its prices at the present scale, 25c-35c-50c, in the hope that the added attraction would be strong enough to meet the Midland's low-price draw. In Providence, Loew's cut its prices at the State to a 25-cent top, and RKO immediately inaugurated first-run double features at the Victory with a 20-cent top.

Then unexpected help came to RKO in a decree by United Artists that it would not permit the Kansas City and Providence Loew's theatres to run either "The Kid from Spain" or "Cynara" at the proposed reduced prices. In both cities, "Cynara" played last week, and this week "The Kid from Spain" was being featured. Inasmuch as five Goldwyn productions are expected to be released through United Artists, what effect the new admission price will have on the disposition of the remaining three is problematical.

To ascertain the specific reasons behind this price-cutting war in which Loew's and RKO have been such important factors, the general situation was discussed with several distribution and circuit executives of large companies.

J. R. Vogel, Loew's theatre operations executive, said:

"The prime motive behind our price-cutting program is to find out whether or not the chief difficulty confronting the motion picture industry at the present time, aside from studio efficiency or lack of it, is the exorbitant admission scale still in effect during a period of depression. We have been severely criticized for our action by other producers as being well on the way to turning the industry back to the days of nickelodeons. Our answer is simply this: If we're going to cut prices at all, and we sincerely feel we are playing ball with the public by doing so, we might as well do a good job of it. After all, this is purely an experiment. We have taken two major cities to try it on, and as far as we are concerned, it is only these two cities that we are interested in as far as that policy is concerned. It is too bad we have not been able to go ahead with our program as we had planned, owing to

WHAT EXECUTIVES SAY ON PRICE CUTS

United Artists' decision, but we feel confident that eventually it will be a success."

Double featuring in suburban houses is blamed by a leading Kansas City exhibitor as among the reasons for the Loew's cut which definitely will go into effect this week. He added that the independent exhibitors' association as a whole is not responsible for the dual bill evil in that city. He said something of this sort may follow Loew's experiment.

On the other hand, an official of one of the large Middle Western circuits said: "Downtown houses won't be affected. If a man is a good showman, he can sell a show to the public at 40 cents even if another house charges 25."

Jules Levy, general sales manager of RKO. said recently upon his return to New York from a visit to company exchanges in the Rocky Mountain district and on the West Coast, that revision downward of admission prices is inevitable.

"The motion picture must cater to purses as well as to the tastes of the democracy," said Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner-First National, in a statement issued this week. "The great masses of the people are the backbone of the amusement business, particularly the motion picture side of that business. Most people today are unable to pay such prices as $2 per seat for socalled roadshow engagements on Broadway, and it is unreasonable to expect them to do it. Therefore, it will be the policy of Warner-First National in the future to present all of our pictures, including special productions, at exactly the same prices as are charged for other films in New York and in other cities throughout the country where cuts are necessary."

Major Warner said later in an interview: "This policy is based on justice and fair play, as well as on hard business calculation. The motion picture stands or falls with the democracy. It must play fair with the people whose support has built it up and maintained it."

All Others Decide To Cut

Of the 11 leading Broadway houses all but Warners' three have definitely decided upon lowering admissions immediately.

New scales are already in effect at the Paramount, with an 85-cent top on weekdays, 99 cents formerly; Seventh Avenue Roxy, 99-cent top on weekdays after 6 p. m. as against the same price formerly from 1 p. m. until closing; the Capitol, 75 cents on weekdays and 99 cents top Saturdays, Sundays and holidays; Radio City Music Hall, which went over to pictures last week, with a $1.65 top, as against its opening stage show policy which was scaled up to $2.50; Palace, Winter Garden, and Rivoli maintain an 85-cent top, while scaled below these are the Rialto, Mayfair and Warner, all at 65 cents. In the case of the Rialto, Publix is making the first New York experimentation with the flexible admission policy. Varying scales, designed to conform to the estimated values of pictures current at the house, will be introduced. Loew's State goes to a top of 75 cents as against 83 cents formerly.

Price cutting by circuits was severely condemned by S. R. Kent, president of Fox, when he arrived on the Coast recently from New York. He also expressed himself as being strongly opposed to sales policies which allow 10-cent minimum admissions.

"Fox will ask a 25-cent minimum on its specials, beginning with 'Cavalcade' and 'State Fair,'" Mr. Kent said, "and this minimum will hold good next year. The minimum otherwise will be 15 cents, except in certain situations where specific circumstances, or established policy, makes 10-cent minimums necessary. Price cutting is a very unwise move which will do much harm to the industry by setting bad precedents, and forcing wholesale price slashes.

A NEW ONE EVERY HOUR

As this issue of Motion Picture Herald goes humming over the presses in Lafayette Street, two zones of New York, the region from Wall Street to Pine and from Times Square to Columbus Circle, are agog with reports of various tentatively considered mergers and rumors of combines without end, in the process of readjustment of the financial structures of the industry, in sequel to the ordeals of depression. The ten days last past have seen a rising calendar of meetings, formal and informal, swift air trips, endless telephone conversations. From this turmoil of discussion, actual projects have yet to emerge. THE EDITOR

"The argument that the cuts are brought about by conditions, and that improvement follows the cuts, is disproved by the fact that business is still poor at those houses which have already reduced," he said. "This is particularly true in houses charging 10 cents."

In New Jersey exhibitors are incensed over competitive moves instituted by the Skouras circuit, the latest being a cut-rate ticket plan. Managers are disposing of blocks of tickets to stores, selling them to merchants at half the printed value with the storekeeper again selling at a profit, but still not at the marked price.

"Price-cutting to the extent to which Loew's is indulging is pure suicide," said Jack Bannon, assistant to Sam Dembow at Paramount. "While it is not my place to criticize other producers, I feel certain I am right in predicting a very quick change in policy on the part of Loew's executives. Paramount has made a thorough study of conditions for the past year. We believe in price-cutting where it is actually needed, solely as a means of bringing in a greater number of customers. We want to play ball with them, but if in communities where people can afford high prices we slash our prices to any great extent, it has the effect of cheapening us and our product in the patron's eye."

Paramount consistently has been cutting prices for over a year in cities where such programs were necessary. At the same time, the Metropolitan in Boston has kept the same top since it opened seven years ago.

Commenting on present exhibition contracts and those for 1933-34, Felix Feist, MGM sales executive, said: "I am optimistic about the future, but I cannot definitely say whether or not there will be any increase or decrease in our present admissions clause which calls for a very low 15-cent minimum. I think that is quite low enough, and I hope that the future will be bright enough to raise that to 25 cents."

A great many of the present contracts have 10-cent minimum admissions clauses, and although it has not been definitely determined by any of the producing companies, it is thought that most companies will get together in an effort to stabilize admission minimums at 15 cents for the year 1933-34.

Ned Depinet, RKO sales head, refused to comment on the situation, saying that it was too far ahead to make any statement, but he did express a hope that the present 10-cent minimum would be increased.

John D. Clark, of Fox, said: "Our contracts for the coming year are not made up, nor has any course of action with regard to admissions been decided upon. If next year brings no better results than the present, I can safely say that our current minimum of 15 cents will hold."

"Any admission lower than 10 cents would be injurious to the industry," said A. W. Smith, sales manager of Warners. "This is our present minimum. If it goes any higher in the 1933-34 contracts, so much the better, but price-cutting or not, it won't go any lower."

Jack Schlaifer, Universal sales head, declared that the present minimum was 10 cents and that he could say nothing about the new contracts. He pointed out that the company makes different agreements with each exhibitor.

"It is too far ahead to forecast any definite change in minimum prices, and, as a matter of fact, we have no set minimum under 25 cents," said Jack Cohn of Columbia.

Report 20-Cent Low Demand

In spite of these denials of any knowledge of what future admissions minimums would be, MGM, Paramount and Warner-First National are said to be demanding 20 cents as bottom admission charge in many situations, a move said to have been brought on by the circuits which insist that subsequent runs charge a minimum above the 15-cent figure, firstly because first-runs are asking much more than this in their houses, and, secondly, because many second, third and subsequent-run theatres double feature at prices which circuits say tend to divert patronage from the major's units.

Nationwide inquiry shows the producer-owned circuits are slashing admissions right and left in key cities. One exception is Fox. Aside from the Skouras operations in the cut-rate ticket field in New Jersey, Fox appears to be holding back in its circuit cuts.

In next week's issue will be presented a detailed resume of the admissions cut situation as it exists in the key cities.

Rialto Near Attendance Mark with New Low Prices

The Publix Rialto on Broadway claims a record for rapid filling of the theatre this week on the opening day of Paramount's "Island of Lost Souls," under the reduced price scale. With admission geared at 25 cents, 40 cents and 65 cents, the house was filled to its capacity of 2,091 seats with 200 standing one hour and twenty minutes after the opening at 9:30 A. M. at the 25-cent morning admission, according to officials.

The fact that "Scarface," which holds the Rialto's opening day attendance record, opened one hour earlier than "Island of Lost Souls," is given by Publix executives as the reason the current attraction did not establish a new attendance figure. The fact that "The Trespasser," which holds the receipts mark, was scaled at 40 cents, 60 cents and 85 cents, is called accountable for the failure to establish a new receipts figure.

PERCY HAMMOND, VETERAN STAGE CRITIC, ACCLAIMS SCREEN AS "THEATRE OF TODAY"

by PERCY HAMMOND

WHEN Arthur Hopkins is sad, then indeed is there cause for melancholy, since neither as man or showman is he given to unreasonable repining. Few producers have faced more smilingly the drawn dagger of the capricious taste and few have defied it with greater optimism. But now dark thoughts his gallant spirit shroud and persuade him to compose for Alfred E. Smith's "New Outlook" a requiem lamenting the disappearance of the Theater. In that plaintive nocturne he celebrates the Drama's golden days when it was a thing of dreams and beauty, and he mourns its downfall at the ugly hands of realism. Forty years ago, he moans, the Theatre's glorious unrealities swept playgoers heavenward in ecstatic flights, and brought them back again with dazed eyes and swelling hearts. Ibsen then intruded with his intellectual meditations on sorrow and misfortune, and since that time his imitators have kept the evil cauldrons of realistic drama boiling. The stenches exuding therefrom, according to Mr. Hopkins, have driven the multitude to other forms of recreation, rendering the Theatre wellnigh obsolete.

One of the Troubles With Mr. Hopkins's cypress murmurings is that they do not admit that the cinema is as much the Theater as is its ancestor, the nicknamed "legitimate" drama. Change is the playgoers' nature, and they have turned from old-fashioned forms to the improvements offered bv the camera. It is not true that, as Mr. Hopkins says, "in great sections of the country there is a new generation that has never seen a play." The fact is that in great sections of the country the present generation is seeing better plays, better acting and better production than its forebears did. It seems to be Mr. Hopkins's impression that when people attend the screen performance of "A Farewell to Arms," "Cavalcade" or "The Sign of the Cross" they are not theater-goers. But they are. It may surprise him to learn that the cinema is the Theater of today, not the "legitimate" of yesterday, and that its plays postulate, in the words of Mr. Walkley, the Drama's essential conflict of individual wills, the sudden crises and catastrophes of character in action. Its playhouses have the magic atmosphere of the Theater and all its fascinating paraphernalia of ticket-brokers, ushers, lights, color and music. And its audiences are not to be pitied, though Mr. Hopkins says they are, for they are far happier and less unintelligent than those of forty years ago, when he and I sat in the galleries and ate peanuts and popcorn while we were stupefied by the dreams and beauty of such hypnotic unrealities as "Rip Van Winkle," "Camille," "La Tosca," "The Henrietta," "The Corsican Brothers," "The Bells," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Jim, the Penman," or "Uncle Tom."

From the old guard of the stage these days come many laments on the status of the old art of the old theatre, with outcries against the invasions of the screen. All season long Mr. Walter Pritchard Eaton has been lecturing his laments to the clubwomen and the press of his New England. Mr. Brock Pemberton is, as evidenced by much quoted expression, very low in his mind about the screen and its relation to the stage. And the other day Mr. Arthur Hopkins, famed producer, gave voice in an article in The New Outlook.

Whereat Mr. Percy Hammond, long known to the midwest as the dramatic voice of the Chicago Tribune and in more recent years as the premier critic of the New York Herald Tribune, took his pen in hand in last Sunday's issue of his paper to set the stage in its place and to greet the screen for the best that it does. Mr. Hammond's article, captioned "Long Live the King," is reproduced herewith. THE EDITOR

I Suggest That Mr. Hopkins, Before He strews more asphodels on the tomb of the Lost Theater, should visit "A Farewell to Arms" as it is presented by Hollywood. He may recall that the "legitimate" drama once tried to visualize Mr. Hemingway's bathetic insolence about the joys and horrors of sex and warfare, and that it failed. Although foot-lighted by Laurence Stallings, a shrewd, experienced and conscientious playwright, it made a futile mess of Mr. Hemingway's sordid masterpiece, limited as it was by the little Theater's little area. But in its screen manifestation it can stretch its arms, take deep breaths and expand itself in a version comparable to its author's intention. Here is the Theater skillfully performing its functions as honestly as possible, and when Mr. Hemingway sulks in disapproval when it displaces his tricks with its own I think that he is temperamental.

If Mr. Hopkins Regrets, As He Says He does, the departure of artificiality from the Theater, he may find consolation in some of the affected attitudes of the cinema. For an example I submit to him the last scene in "A Farewell to Arms," wherein Miss Helen Hayes expires in the embrace of Mr. Gary Cooper, to the music of the "Liebestod," played by distant phonographic flutes and violas. Mr. Cooper lifts Miss Hayes from her deathbed and carries her to a window overlooking a garden, and as he does so the hospital sheets and cerements dissolve into a symphony of rehearsed and graceful draperies. Mr. Hopkins may remember that when the "legitimate" theater tried to reproduce this tragic scene it awkwardly dragged the dying nurse from her chamber to a stage-front rostrum and commanded her to perish before an unconvinced and unsympathetic public. Under the influence of the film's spurious mesmerism Mr. Hopkin's eyes, I venture to say, will be so dimmed with tears that he will not know whether it is art or hoakum.

An Understanding Impresario Should adjust his ancient traditions to modern circumstances and realize that the Theater is reborn in the moving and talking pictures. The cinema has its handicaps, but its advantages enable it to overcome them triumphantly. In his essay in "The New Outlook" Mr. Hopkins is like an old bicycler, denouncing the automobile as the end of transportation, a Bourbon of the entrepreneurs refusing to believe in progress. Since I admire him for his many virtuous qualities, I whisper in his ear that The King Is Dead, and I ask him to join me in shouting "Long Live the King!"

National Board Meets Feb. 9

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, of which Wilton A. Barrett is executive secretary, will hold its ninth annual conference at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, on February 9 and 10.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR DECEMBER

● Three of the films named by the nation's key theatres as best-selling pictures during December, continued during that month successes begun as early as October. MGM's "Strange Interlude" was an October "champion," while the same company's "Prosperity" was so cited in November. RKO Radio's "The Conquerors"—tied in December with two others for fourth place—was another November "champion." Besides the fourth place tie, fifth ranking is shared, bracketing "Strange Interlude" and First National's "You Said a Mouthful." It is to be noted that productions with a strong serious strain dominate the December group, only three of the eight pictures emphasizing the comic elements.

KENT PROPOSAL IN ITS FINAL FORM

Final Text of Kent Plan for Appeals Board and Contract

Following is the official and final revised form of the Sidney R. Kent proposals which several distributors have adopted, and which is now going forward to the motion picture industry for study prior to February 1, when the program becomes effective:

PROPOSAL FOR A NATIONAL BOARD OF APPEALS AND CONCILIATION

In order to solve within the motion picture industry many of the problems involved in the inter-relationship of exhibitor and distributor and to provide a means whereby these problems can be examined in a fair, openminded and impartial manner by the people who best understand them and can best contribute to their solution, two principal proposals for a machinery of industry self-regulation and settlement of controversies are made:

1—The formulation of an Optional Standard License Agreement to be offered by the respective distributors who adopt the same, as an alternative to the distributors' own form or forms of annual exhibition contract, the exhibitor to have the free option of choosing which form of contract he desires to accept.

  a—The standard form to contain an arbitration clause for the arbitration of all controversies and disputes arising under this contract, this arbitration clause to be included at the option of the exhibitor.

2—A national board representative of the distributors and exhibitors to act as a National Board of Appeals under the arbitration clause of the Optional Standard License Agreement in the specific cases hereafter mentioned, and otherwise to act as a national conciliation board.

The Optional Standard License Agreement

A definite standard form of contract has been formulated as the result of the most thorough and careful study of the problem and this definitive contract has been presented to the individual distributors for their adoption respectively.

The contract is not intended to determine the respective sales policies of the distributors, but to make uniform the handling of those features of the business which are necessarily common to all interests. It is believed that this form of contract is so fundamentally sound that it can be adopted and used for a definite period of three (3) years.

In the interests of exhibitors an innovation has been incorporated in the arbitration clause of this standard contract. It is provided that if an exhibitor elects arbitration under the standard contract and the local arbitration board either by a unanimous or by a majority vote, after finding the facts of the particular controversy under the contract, are of the opinion that the strict enforcement of the contract according to its terms would work a hardship upon either of the parties thereto because of the unusual conditions beyond the control of either party to the contract and arising after the contract was made, such local arbitration board may then recommend to the parties to the contract a settlement of the controversy outside the strict provisions of the contract and give to the parties an opportunity of either settling in accordance with the recommendations of the Board or in such other fashion as the parties themselves may mutually agree. If in such case the parties do not adopt the recommendation of the Board or otherwise settle the matter, then the arbitration board or either party to the arbitration proceeding may refer the matter to the National Board of Appeals which will have full power to pass upon the whole controversy involved in the arbitration and to determine what settlement of the controversy is to be made between the contracting parties, and the decision of the National Board of Appeals in this respect is to be final and binding upon the parties and to be carried out by them.

Matters for Conciliation

Wholly apart from matters of contract which are to be determined by arbitration, many problems and differences arise in the carrying on of the business between exhibitor and distributor which ought to be susceptible of fair and friendly settlement, and to this end it is proposed that local committees of conciliation should be set up, to which exhibitors and distributors may carry their differences in an effort to adjust them. If such differences cannot be conciliated and adjusted after the local conciliation machinery has been invoked, it is proposed that the matter be referred to a national board for conciliation. Such important and difficult questions as protection and run will immediately occur to the industry as appropriate subjects for such local and national bodies to deal with.

It is proposed that exhibitors locally endeavor to arrive at conclusions as to fair, reasonable and workable protection and run schedules and that they call to their aid for this purpose the local conciliation committees, and if they are unable to arrive at definite conclusions on the subject, they present the questions to the National Board for conciliation. The findings and recommendations of this National Board will without doubt be regarded as so representative and so convincing that they will be freely accepted and followed.

It is not intended to compel any exhibitor or any distributor to resort either to the local or to the national conciliation boards, nor to bind any of them by contract to do so, but it is intended to make available to all parties earnestly and honestly seeking aid in working out their common problems, a machinery in which they can have confidence of a fair, impartial and understanding hearing and consideration.

In order that the National Board of Appeals and Conciliation shall not be unreasonably burdened with matters which should from their very nature be disposed of locally and in order that it may function with the best results, the National Board of Appeals should have final authority in itself to determine in any specific instance other than those recommended by any local arbitration board under the arbitration provisions of the optional standard license contract, whether it will or will not undertake to hear any complaints submitted to it upon appeal from any of the local committees. If this rule is followed, a majority of the National Board could decide to hear and attempt to conciliate any extraordinary or unforeseen controversy not possible of conciliation locally.

It must be borne in mind that it is not intended that the National Board shall be concerned with the rentals of pictures which have been fixed in the negotiations which preceded the execution of any exhibition contract, nor attempt to raise or lower film rentals agreed upon by Contract.

In contract disputes, the procedure to be followed is specified in the optional arbitration clause (Clause Twentieth) of the Optional Standard License Agreement. Contract disputes not arising under an Optional Standard License Agreement as to which the exhibitor has elected to include the arbitration clause, will not be considered by the National Board of Appeals.

Personnel and Selection of Members

For the purpose of hearing appeals or conciliating complaints not involving a circuit of theatres affiliated with a producer or distributor, the National Board of Appeals shall consist of three unaffiliated exhibitors and three distributor representatives.

For the purpose of hearing appeals or conciliating complaints involving a circuit of theatres affiliated with a producer or distributor, the National Board of Appeals shall consist of either (a) four unaffiliated exhibitors, two distributor representatives and two affiliated circuit representatives; or (b) two unaffiliated exhibitors, one distributor representative and one affiliated circuit representative, and the action of a majority shall be the action of the National Board.

It is important that both parties to the controversy have fair and equal representation of disinterested parties who are generally familiar with the business. Selection of unaffiliated exhibitor members can be made by the national exhibitor associations or by lot from a panel of unaffiliated exhibitors conveniently located.

Procedure for Referring Complaints for Conciliation to National Board

Before referring any matter to the National Board of Appeals, the proper local arbitration board, protection committee or conciliation committee must hear the complaint or controversy and shall first exhaust their efforts to determine, conciliate or dispose of the controversy. After this is done the local board or committee may then refer the complaint or controversy to the National Appeal Board for a hearing. The local board or committee will forward to the National Board, in connection with each case or complaint:

(1) A full and complete statement of their finding of facts.

(2) All of the evidence submitted to them in the case or controversy.

(3) Their recommendations for a settlement which was not accepted by the parties.

Each party to the controversy will be permitted to also submit their own statements of facts, arguments and recommendations.

In regard to protection and run controversies, it is contemplated that a local committee representative of all first and subsequent run exhibitors will be established in the city or territory where it is desired that an attempt be made to work out by conferences a protection and run schedule or arrangement that will be acceptable to all such exhibitors. If these negotiations become deadlocked and all reasonable efforts are exhausted to bring about a local agreement, then the questions in dispute may be referred to the National Board for conciliation by such local committee.

If a protection and run schedule is agreed upon by the local exhibitors and established in the territory, and in connection therewith a continuing zoning committee is established to hear and conciliate complaints in connection with the established protection and run plan, this continuing committee may submit any disputed question they are unable to agree upon to the National Board for conciliation after they have exhausted their efforts to effect an acceptable adjustment.

In regard to complaints of alleged unreasonable overbuying by a circuit or any other exhibitor, it is contemplated that a local Conciliation Committee on which there is a fair and equal representation of distributors and exhibitors should be established to whom complaints of unreasonable overbuying by any exhibitor may be referred for investigation and conciliation. If the local Conciliation Committee is unable to bring about an acceptable adjustment, and in their opinion there is merit to the complaint, then this Committee may refer the complaint to the National Board for conciliation, hearing and recommendation.

The National Board of Appeals and Conciliation will by its prestige and personnel give impartial consideration and arrive at fair and intelligent solutions of the more troublesome and irritating controversies and problems not possible to solve locally, as well as solve the unforeseen difficulties that may arise in the future. It should be considered as the industry's supreme court of self-regulation. Because of its standing in the industry, if properly conducted, its findings and recommendations will carry great influence.

The success of this program will depend obviously upon the earnestness and open-mindedness with which it is applied by the Industry. Being an innovation it cannot at the outset be presented in complete detailed form in all respects and many details of procedure may arise from time to time which must be determined as the occasion presents. The spirit and principle, however, underlying the proposals appear to be so fundamentally sound and fair that we have complete confidence in its successful outcome.

RKO, Paramount Approve Plan

Large distributors this week continue individual adoption of the Sidney R. Kent proposal for a national appeals board and a standard form of exhibition contract and arbitration. Before leaving from New York for Hollywood, Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of sales for RKO, officially announced that his company had agreed to use the new optional contract, and had approved the national board. The new license will be made to RKO exhibitors on March 1. Paramount has also approved all three planks of the plan.

Previously MGM, Fox and Educational-World Wide officially indicated acceptance. Metro accounts may use the contract on and after February 15, Fox after February 1. Paramount on January 10 sent word to M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, that it had approved the proposals and would place the contract before its customers February 1. Universal is supposed to start the contract about February 15.

The complete final revised form of the proposals which distributors have signed and which are now being offered to state exhibitor units for ratification appear elsewhere on this page. The pact is to be effective for three years from February, 1933. Work on the organization of the appeals board will commence about March 1. Distributors are now printing the final form of the contract, which, with the appeals pact, were not completely revised until a few days ago. Copies of both are now going forward to the industry.

Idaho Theatre Owners Association wired Sidney R. Kent at his headquarters at Fox, vigorously denouncing the contract and indicating that it will fight its presentation to the trade.

"MADAME BUTTERFLY" AS MUSIC-FILM

Producers Did Not Take Full Advantage of Puccini's Operatic Material, Declares O'Sullivan

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

The processes of inter-relation between sound and picture are still on their tedious way. The American screen more conspicuously than the European has refused seriously to endeavor to evaluate relatively sight and sound as parallel components with any consistent line of production sufficient to evoke a public appraisal.

Paramount's "Madame Butterfly," released December 30, is decidedly a case in point. It is true enough that it was first a play and subsequently Puccini's musical inspiration. But it is exceedingly clear that its survival as a piece of material today has been a musical manifestation.

Mr. Joseph O'Sullivan, who discusses the piece in the ensuing article, in addition to his considerable motion picture experience in various sectors, is a musician with extensive operatic background and experience. TERRY RAMSAYE

For more than a quarter of a century "Madame Butterfly" has been the most effective lachrymose opus in the repertoire of major opera companies throughout the world, the tragic story of Cho-Cho-San as tonalized by Puccini wringing tears and kopecks from confirmed opera-goers as well as those who don't know a grand opera from a horse opera.

When David Belasco made a stage piece from the John Luther Long story of the little Geisha girl, with Blanche Bates in the role, there was no dramatic history made. Subsequently, Valerie Bergere played the role with some success, and then the drama lapsed into innocuous desuetude.

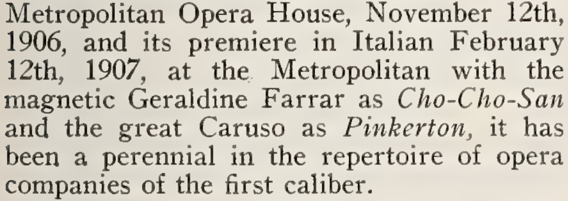
It was only when the great Italian melodist, Giacomo Puccini, saw the play in London at the Duke of York's Theatre with Evelyn Millard in the leading role and decided it was ideal material for opera treatment, that the real career of "Butterfly" was forecast. In 1904, the opera of "Madame Butterfly," the most poignantly pathetic of all pieces for the lyric stage, came into being.

From its first production in English at the Metropolitan Opera House, November 12th, 1906, and its premiere in Italian February 12th, 1907, at the Metropolitan with the magnetic Geraldine Farrar as Cho-Cho-San and the great Caruso as Pinkerton, it has been a perennial in the repertoire of opera companies of the first caliber.

With such a positive record of success as an opera and a negligible one as a purely dramatic vehicle, it is strange that the producers of the audible screen version of "Madame Butterfly" did not take more advantage of the operatic material as Puccini conceived it, for assuredly the music of the famous Italian composer has been the breath of life to the tragic saga of Cho-Cho-San. Despite its undeniable appeal as drama, without the exalting pathos of the great melodist's score John Luther Long's touching story would long since have been lost in that limbo that is the fate of the ephemeral.

Although the makers of the screen version of "Madame Butterfly" have utilized some of the music of the operatic score, chiefly to give tonal atmosphere, the dramatic and pictorial adaptation of the story is such that the musical interpretation which has really given enduring life to the piece cannot be applied with anything approaching the intent of the composer; nor is there evidence that such an attempt has been made. There are moments, however, when the action and the music of Puccini synchronize as in the opera version, and at such times there is no mistaking the profound appeal. An instance in point is where Cho-Cho-San, Suzuki and the little child seat themselves at the window to watch and await the coming of Pinkerton. As evening fades into night and nightfall deepens, the three figures are seen silhouetted against the background and the plaintive music of the "Humming Chorus" is heard throughout their lonely vigil. This is as it was in the opera, and the effect is enchanting. This "Humming Chorus" theme is used by Puccini in a reminiscent manner as a background to dialogue when Sharpless reads Pinkerton's letter to Cho-Cho-San, in the opera, and the significance is unmistakable. But in the picture this letter scene does not occur.

THE VIGIL ("The Humming Chorus")



The plaintive music of the Humming Chorus is heard as Cho-Cho-San, Suzuki and little Trouble seat themselves at the window to watch and wait the coming of the faithless Pinkerton. Heard throughout their lonely vigil, the music has a haunting effect and is a poignant note to a pathetic scene.

Such scenes as those which inspired the delectable flower duet of Cho-Cho-San and Suzuki; the entrance of the numerous relations and the piquant scene which follows when the little Geisha girl is questioned by Sharpless and Pinkerton, with the typical underscoring of the composer; the scene in the last act where Cho-Cho-San sings the lullaby to little Trouble just before she learns of Pinkerton's faithlessness; all these have no counterpart in the picture, hence no opportunity to utilize the music of the opera score. Nor can the many motifs with which Puccini pointed the significant action of the drama;—the curse of Lo Zio Bonzo with its eerie whole-tone progression in thirds, that recur throughout the opera; the fate motif that reminds her "Better to die with honor than live with dishonor"; and other meaningful musical motifs that have made of a simple pathetic story an intense lyric drama that has lived because of its musical transcription; these have no fitting place in the picture. It is evident they were not considered important, or else were not fully understood.

As noted in a foregoing comment, one hears underscored some of the music of Puccini, notably the curtain music of the first act, portions of the love-duet of the first act and of Un Bel Di ("One Fine Day"), and fragments of the opera throughout. With no sequential plan that permits reiterative thematic development or amplification, there can, naturally, be no real concept of the musical interpretation.

As a touching photodrama with a colorful tonal background "Madame Butterfly" will have its sympathetic audience. To those who accord to the "Butterfly" that has brought distinction to the careers of Geraldine Farrar, Tamaki Kiuri, Emmy Destinn, Florence Easton and other famous singers, a niche all its own among the great works of the lyric-dramatic stage, this production of the audible screen will be but a source of regret that the producers did not grasp the opportunity to do something really notable in photoplay-music production.

SILENT SCREEN ACTORS MUST TRAIN FOR SOUND, SAYS JUNIOR LAEMMLE

All Will Have to "Buy Stage," Executive Warns, Saying "Buy Hollywood" Policy of 18 Months Has Been Costly

Studios Wasting Half Million a Year Hunting Talent, Declares Universal Executive; Day of Beauty sans Ability Is Over

Actors of the silent screen must train themselves for the talking picture or producers will be forced to "Buy Stage," says Carl Laemmle, Jr., the ruling voice of Universal's studio. "Buy Hollywood" as a practice has proved "not so good" in the last 18 months, in the view of the youthful executive of production, who declares he has the records to support his assertion that several really great stories have been pigeon-holed or at least have been impaired in the making by the scarcity of capable lead players, even with the help of Broadway.

For precisely this purpose of discovering new talent the studios are wasting half a million dollars a year in trying out college students, former silent picture players and star athletes, Mr. Laemmle said. Universal alone, he added, has expended $300,000 in the last twelvemonth searching for actors with ability equal to their publicity build-up; John M. Stahl has postponed production of "Only Yesterday" nearly two months during the hunt for a suitable actress; a six months' canvass of available material has failed to bring forth a young actor to play "Laughing Boy."

Situation Acute

"The casting situation is acute right now," declared Mr. Laemmle, who has built up his own stock company at Universal City. "What about tomorrow if Hollywood actors do not prepare themselves to meet the demands of the screen? The screen has no place for a 'ham' actor. To put a star with a mere publicity reputation and no acting ability into a good picture today not only makes the actor look ridiculous in comparison with good performances by well trained actors in minor roles but costs the producer who gave him the break a fortune when the picture fails. Minimizing dialogue to aid international appeal of new pictures also demands more active acting ability than has been heretofore demanded.

"The standards of pictures have been raised so much by improved stories and mechanical perfection that the public has become far more critical than ever before, and while a great performance may make a star overnight, a bad or only fair performance makes any actor a liability rather than an asset. It used to be that a screen actress' principal assets were the beauty she too frequently got from the cosmetician, and shapely limbs, and that a good looking sheik could win stardom with publicity and fan letters from love-sick girls but—these things are gone forever. Future advancement depends more upon great acting performances than anything else.

Mr. Laemmle offered the information that the vogue of most silent picture players in Hollywood has been reduced from five years to a few months, explaining:

"They have not delivered performances equal to those by the seasoned stage actors who have served an apprenticeship in dozens of characters and learned every phase of showmanship and sincere, sympathetic interpretation. A great many of the featured players of today's pictures are the stage actors who 'stole' scenes away from silent film stars by superior performances in minor parts.

"Motion pictures today are no longer a get-rich-quick haven for 'fakirs' and 'sensationalists.' They are the proving ground for real actors who, having learned their craft, are flexible enough to accept direction and adjust themselves to the talking picture technique, taking advantage of the greater opportunities film closeups offer for naturalness and that sound recording offers for vocal expression.

Twenty to 40 new stars must be created this year, the executive said, one factor being the necessity for making pictures of international appeal.

"Improved foreign marketing is one of the surest means to take the business out of the red ink," Mr. Laemmle added. "With all the world our screen, producers cannot gamble with questionable performers. All producers are watching story preparation more closely than ever; dialogue is showing marked improvements and application; direction likewise. This advancement cannot be impaired by inferior acting. If producers cannot get better actors from Broadway than from Hollywood they will have to go to London, Paris, Berlin or anywhere else.

"All foreign actors should learn English with a view to ultimately playing in Hollywood. American actors should learn French, German and Spanish for their own advancement. All leading players who appear in our Berlin productions must learn English so that they may be brought to Hollywood when their European box office reputations are established.

Dramatic Schools Out of Date

"Progress demands a never ending search for talent. Little theatres' semi-professional acting groups must point their players toward talking pictures. College dramatic schools will have to adopt new training methods—some of them are 20 years behind the times. 'One part' actors must broaden their scope, avoid type classification and realize that merely looking a part is by no means sufficient today."

Mr. Laemmle pointed out that the outstanding performances in 1932 were by stage actors more than 40 years old and stage women near 30, indicating that the public does not draw the age line as it once did, also that the leading men and young actresses have been unable to compete with the seasoned troupers.

LAEMMLE, 66, SAYS ACTION'S THE THING

"If producers could feel the public pulse, they could make good pictures unerringly," said Carl Laemmle, observing his 66th birthday this week in Hollywood. "Today, however, that is impossible. The world is in too chaotic a state as a result of the depression. Regardless of this, I believe the public needs more entertainment than ever before. Apparently it wants more action and less talk. My organization is trying to supply that need. There is no cheapening of production costs. The industry is merely eliminating wasted, dead overhead, and is making every dollar invested in entertainment visible on the screen."

Surrounded by more than a hundred friends and employees, Mr. Laemmle celebrated his anniversary by cutting a 66-pound cake presented by workers at Universal City.

"I feel hale and hearty, and I believe that I will be connected with the industry for many more years," he said. "I also believe that the depression is at an end, and that conditions are improving."

Regent Formed To Distribute

Regent Pictures, Inc., has been formed to operate in the independent field, with headquarters at 1540 Broadway, according to announcement this week by Harry N. Blair, vice-president, who said the company is prepared to handle features and short subjects.

Contracts are now being negotiated with two-feature units for product. While the company will distribute principally, it plans first to produce 12 features and approximately 52 shorts, consisting of one, two and three-reel subjects.

Negotiations were said to be under way with numerous independent distributors for state right distribution of the program about to be produced.

Roxy Houses Art Exhibit

An exhibition of paintings and sculpture by destitute artists is now on view at the Seventh Avenue Roxy through this week. Howard S. Cullman, receiver operating the theatre, has arranged to have the Roxy bear all the expenses of the venture, and proceeds of any sales arranged will go to the artist direct without any reductions.

New Mexico Owners Meet

The New Mexico Theatre Owners Association, with headquarters in Santa Fe, held a meeting this week at which were discussed matters pertinent to the membership of the association. Nathan Salmon is president of the organization.

Improved box office business for the last three weeks in December and the first week of January, as compared with the same period in 1931, is reflected in the graph, from a compilation of theatre receipts appearing weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Relative fluctuations in weekly grosses in the twelve indicated cities are shown for the period in 1932 and in the year previous. The gross in each city for the first week in December in each year is taken as 100 per cent and the figures for the succeeding four weeks are plotted accordingly, using the first December gross in 1931 as the baseline for all figures for that year and employing the corresponding 1932 figure in the same way.

Hays Sees Shorter Week as Film Aid

There is more substantial foundation for faith in the future of motion picture entertainment than ever before, Will H. Hays said upon his arrival in Hollywood this week. "Notwithstanding the problems of readjustment which the motion picture industry, as well as industry generally, have before them, film leaders already are projecting plans for the greater era of entertainment that must arise from the shorter work week in American industry," declared the president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

"The motion picture must rise or fall upon the essential commodity—entertainment—with which it serves the American public, and indeed a world-wide public. The MPPDA has just summarized the results of the most critical opinion of film features produced during the past 12 months, and we find that as many as 150 separate and distinct full-length features produced by the American industry during that period were named in the choices of the '10 best pictures' of the year."

Mr. Hays said that Hollywood need make no apology for the character of entertainment thus produced and that artistically each month has shown some new phase of improvement.

"A new horizon is opening for screen entertainment," he said, "with the dawn of greater leisure. The need of a shorter week is no longer a theory; it is a condition which industry and government must meet. Such an era is no longer a mere hope. We have reached the point where the machine must be utilized for its greatest social purpose: the production of leisure as well as labor.

"American industry should have no excuses to make for the fact that we have built upon a plane of prosperity, not a plane of depression. The place to begin, in the return to normal business conditions, is from where we've left off."

Mr. Hays pointed out that from a social standpoint the motion picture screen is only now at the beginning of its career and that it still is to show its special possibilities in the field of selective or higher entertainment.

S.O.S. Company Buys Used Equipment from Government

The Sales On Sound Corporation, New York sound equipment company, has purchased from the United States government considerable motion picture equipment. Included in the lot bought are 76 projectors of various types, most of which were in use on ships of the United States Navy and at shore stations.

The shipment is expected to reach New York early in February, when the machines will be repaired where necessary. When repairs are completed the equipment will be placed on the market.

Loew's Declares Dividend

Loew's, Inc., has declared a dividend of $1.62½, the regular quarterly payment on its preferred stock, payable February 15.

Schenck to Drop Production Work

Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, is understood retiring from production on his own. The contemplated inactivity of Art Cinema Corporation as a production unit for United Artists is connected with the decision. Current theatre conditions are understood to be an important factor in his decision, with a desire to devote more time to other business interests.

The decision is understood to have no effect on Mr. Schenck's position as United Artists president, nor is he expected to step completely out of the production field. As United Artists head, he will make distribution deals. Edward Small will make pictures for United Artists, in which films Mr. Schenck will have an interest. Art Cinema will not be dissolved but will merely become inactive.

Nudist Film Barred, Board Hears Appeal

Dr. Frank P. Graves, New York state commissioner of education, has reserved decision in the appeal to the board of regents of the department of education by George Dembow and Michael Mindlin, sponsors of the picture "This Naked Age," for showing in the state. The motion picture division of the department had refused to permit exhibition of the production, which purports to depict the cult of Nudism. Louis Nizor represented them in hearings at Albany.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

AT the bottom of Long Island Sound, close to Manhattan Island, sea-exploring Dr. William Beebe last week slapped at a wayward fish, caught a clam in the mud and a starfish sprawled lazily over some sea-weed, without getting wet. A new-type little submarine, demonstrated for the first time by Simon Lake, submarine pioneer, enabled Dr. Beebe to make his gesture. Times Magazine reported that B. S. Moss, Manhattan showman, is financing the venture. Probably with some of the money which he got when he sold his circuit to the interests which are now controlled by RKO.

The newest Lake product is 22 ft. long, 6 ft. wide, weighs 10 tons, has room for four. Other Lake inventions have been used to film the bottom of the sea. Paramount was negotiating with him last year for filming rights to a salvaging expedition.

Mr. Lake, who at 66 still hopes to make a stable fortune from submarines, enthusiastically projects "possibilities for the submarine in the recovery of gold and oil," etc.

Entrepreneur Moss, invoking his powers as money man, insisted on naming the new vessel Explorer. This disappointed Designer Lake, who ached to call her Crab.

Ex-Princess Pola Negri, speaking without her Polish accent and with a dash of American slang, slipped this line to reporters last week while playing RKO's Mainstreet, Kansas City: "Pola has been battling the depression and she's got it licked. I've been a big success at every movie theatre I've played during the last 18 months. I've pulled theatres out of the red everywhere I've gone." The young lady, who appears to be the answer to every circuit manager's prayer, "confided" to the news writers that she soon will be available for bookings.

Just about this time, after editors of the country have said their pieces about "Junior's" Rockefeller Center, John D., Sr., reclining in Florida away from the blasts of weather and press, is probably remarking, "And I thought the young feller was comin' along all right."

Young Al Zimbalist, publicist for Warner theatres in New Jersey, frequently breaks into print with notices about his machinations in theatre press agentry. Mr. Zimbalist's latest contribution is a piece about his new play, "Publicity Is My Racket," which he hopes to have produced in Hollywood and on Broadway. "The theme of the play," he says, "is based on the aspirations of the young publicist whose greatest desire is to constantly trick the (circuit) efficiency expert who is a close relation to a relation of a relation to the company's president.

Sam Kaplan, deposed union head, in testifying the other day in defense of a supreme court suit, told a judge and jury, "I am a godsend to the motion picture operators!"

Mr. Kaplan mentioned threats which had been made upon his person in the form of telephone calls from an anonymous man, who Kaplan said described himself as a friend and told him there was a plot hatching to kidnap him.

"You don't mean a threat, do you?" asked Judge McCook. "You mean a warning." Regardless, Kaplan related that police raided a house and found "kidnapping apparatus" of goggles, tape and handcuffs. Asked how he knew the apparatus was intended for him, Kaplan replied, "The police told me so."

Kaplan also said that his bodyguards were employed only six days a week, and when the court asked how he was protected on the seventh day, he replied, "Other folks took me out."

TAY Garnett and Robert Fellows, Universal directors, are now resting comfortably, and safely, on the sun deck of the Europa, en route to Germany to make scenes for "SOS Iceberg."

Alighting from the Chief at Chicago, the two were approached by strangers who said they were news photographers, and asked them out of the station for "better views." In the train yard, the strangers produced pistols and forced the directors to accompany them "on a little ride," later demanding $15,000 for their release. Garnett recalled a Chicago racketeer acquaintance, and on the pretext of calling a friend for financial aid, he called the racketeer, who arrived poste haste and arranged for the directors' release in consideration for their cash on hand, about $400. This left them without carfare to New York, whereupon they borrowed $100 from the racketeer acquaintance and proceeded speedily on their way. They arrived here quite "shaky."

AD copy and illustrations run by theatres in the metropolitan papers would have little chance with W. A. Black, Ray County, Mo., editor. Mr. Black, of the Lawson, Mo., Review, received a three-column plate of current news pictures in his feature service. Among other pictures was a revealing view of Lady Godiva astride a spotted horse. The horse was wearing a bridle and Lady Godiva was wearing—nothing.

Lady Godiva, portrayed by Sally Rand at the recent Chicago artists' ball, sat demurely atop the noble steed. But why, reasoned Mr. Black, should his readers be allowed to view such pictures. News was scarce, however, and Mr. Black needed the plate to fill space. Accordingly, he ordered the nude Godiva beaten up. The result of the assault could plainly be seen in the Review. Lady Godiva was a sad and formless smear of ink—just a blot above ten-hands of horse flesh.

Once Lady Godiva rode nude through the streets of a Saxon town and thus removed an oppressive tax upon the people. But "Peeping Tom," a tailor of Coventry, took one peep and was stricken blind. Editor Black spared from this fate readers of the Review at Lawton.

"The stunt tied in perfectly with the character portrayed by Ruth Chatterton," the publicity continued. The cards were also distributed in lots to "several well-known men in town, who passed them out to friends as a gag."

MUSICOMEDY COMEBACK

Exemplified in "42nd Street"; Also in "The Secret of Madame Blanche" and Mae West Film

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

The other day Leo Peterson, general manager of the Black Hills Amusement Company of Rapid City, S. D., dropped in for a chat. He had driven down to southern California for a holiday vacation. Asked what sort of product he would like to see made this year he put pictures with music first. "My patrons like anything with music," he said. "And I believe a series of good music pictures will appeal strongly these next few months."

Well, Leo, it looks like you and any others who feel the same way about it will get your wish. There are a number in the immediate offing which will be out and out musicomedy or some modification thereof. Others will have musical numbers either incidental to them, or essential factors in the development of the stories.

A Real Musicomedy

Among the first to be made ready is Warner Bros.' "42nd Street." This is frankly patterned after that pioneer musical film, "Broadway Melody," only of course the technique, the sound and just about everything else has been vastly improved since the days when that picture set box offices on their ears. But it is an intimate story of backstage life, recording the conception, development and presentation of a big Broadway musical comedy smash, and revealing in gripping fashion the trials, failures and triumphs of some 200 persons connected with the production. The story has much interesting human drama, and the actual production numbers are very neatly woven into it. The little chorus gal becomes a star and all that sort of thing. Incidentally, the little chorus gal is Ruby Keeler, who is Mrs. Al Jolson, and she does a good job in her first stellar spot. It also has Bebe Daniels, Guy Kibbee, Ginger Rogers, Dick Powell, Lyle Talbot, Warner Baxter, George Brent, Una Merkel and others—more big-time names than the biggest real Broadway musicomedy. Busby Berkeley has provided some eye-filling dance routines, and the girls are pulchritudinous knockouts. They are so good that Warners has signed up 14 on contracts.

"The Secret of Madame Blanche," from MGM, is not a musical play, but incident is some stage atmosphere, with Irene Dunne as a showgirl, who goes to London with her troupe and marries the scion of an aristocratic family, with disastrous results. It starts back in the gay nineties and moves up to the present, and in the early sequences Miss Dunne reveals a voice of singular charm and sweetness. It is based upon a Martin Brown play called "The Lady." Once more Miss Dunne shows her remarkable ability to play both young and old characters.

The other picture this week carrying musical numbers features none other than the spectacular author-star of such Broadway sensations as "Diamond Lil," "Sex" and "Pleasure Man," the two last named of which were too much even for Manhattan. Mae West is quite as spectacular and unique on the screen as she is behind the footlights, as you already know if you saw her in "Night After Night" with George Raft. She is an extraordinarily vivid personality, one that has something very definite to contribute to the screen, providing her talents can be kept within reasonable bounds of propriety. "She Done Him Wrong," her first starring picture, is nothing more or less than her stage play, "Diamond Lil." Its only disguise is the title, and the fact that she is called "Lou" instead of "Lil." If you happen to come within censored areas, it is difficult to tell just what you are going to have left to show when the censors get through.

Paramount previewed Ben Schulberg's second independent picture, "Luxury Liner." It is "Grand Hotel" on a steamboat. While the big steamer crosses the Atlantic from Bremen to New York we witness the drama that teems from the steerage to the royal suite. Action revolves around a substitute ship's doctor, played by George Brent, who made the voyage so he could pursue his wife, who is running off with a millionaire. There are such things as birth, death, suicide, murder, the stock market crash, romance, tragedy, all happening kaleidoscopically within the great steel shell as she plows through the sea. Settings are luxurious, photography and costuming gorgeous. Outstanding is an excellent comedy performance by Alice White, too little seen of late on the screen.

Columbia has made a very entertaining screenplay from Preston Surges' story, "Child of Manhattan." In its comedy sequences it is particularly good, having been directed by Eddie Buzzell, himself a Broadway comic of note. Features are Nancy Carroll, John Boles, Buck Jones. It's interesting to see Buck get away from the "horse operas," although he plays a cowman from the wide-open spaces who falls for a little taxi dancer when he visits New York, though the little taxi dancer falls for the rich young man, of course. Noteworthy is the screen debut of Jessie Ralph, veteran stage character woman.

The talk of Hollywood is "Cavalcade," which opened Thursday night at the Chinese. HERALD readers have already been apprised of its magnificence. What I wish to report is that no picture ever has received more unanimous praise from the makers of pictures. It is generally conceded to be one of the finest productions ever made and Winfield Sheehan, Frank Lloyd and all others concerned in its making are being showered with congratulations by their Hollywood neighbors.

Significant is the reception of Diana Wynard. The picture colony enthusiastically proclaims her as a new and great cinema star. She is under contract to MGM, and after a visit in England, where she will appear in a play, is to return to Culver City to star in "Reunion in Vienna."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Rome Express

(Universal)

Drama

Utilizing the single setting, as has been done in several American productions recently, this Gaumont British picture, which Universal is releasing in this country, is excellent drama, strong entertainment. Set exclusively on the speeding express running from Paris to Rome, the production combines drama, smartly handled comedy, a bit of pathos and technical excellence in a manner which serves to make of it a feature entirely entertaining.

The production values, as regards photography, sets, atmospheric backgrounds and the development of a clear impression of a fast train speeding through the night, are highly effective. The performances are smooth, capable throughout, with no single exception. From the standpoint of the American exhibitor selling the picture to his patronage, the players, with only a few exceptions, are unfortunately quite unknown.

The names which will count to a certain extent, at least, are those of Esther Ralston, Conrad Veidt and perhaps Gordon Harker. The rest cannot be counted upon for selling value, however satisfactorily they handle their roles. The best results, from the advertising angle, will probably lie with a concentration upon the story, the dramatic elements and the unusual setting, rather than with the cast.

A cross-section of the train on the trip reveals an official of the French Surete, or police, on a holiday; a man and a woman, both married, on a clandestine journey; a thief making his getaway with a stolen portrait; his two former compatriots hot on his heels, without his knowledge; a garrulous Englishman, proud of his own wit; a millionaire whose hobby is rare paintings, and his secretary, a meek, downtrodden individual; a motion picture actress of note, whose rise to fame drew her from a much lesser station, and her publicity-seeking manager.

The paths of this strangely mixed group oddly cross, become involved in a murder, an investigation, the renewing of old acquaintances, a denouement as the murderer leaps to his death from the flying train.

There is not a moment's lagging of interest in the picture. The oddly shaped pieces of the plot all dovetail smartly to produce a well-rounded, well executed film story. The comparative lack of names of selling value in this country will necessitate the exhibitor putting added pressure behind his selling effort. His first showing, however, should bring others into the theatre. The opportunity for unusual lobby display on the basis of the speeding express train setting, is too good to overlook.—Aaronson, New York.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

No Other Woman

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Considerably by reason of the presence of massive Charles Bickford, "No Other Woman" takes on an atmosphere of rapid and vigorous action which should appeal fundamentally to the audience of almost any type or place. Also responsible for the effectiveness of the picture as entertainment is the splendid work of Irene Dunne, who again demonstrates her ability and versatility, in the role of the long-suffering wife who sticks by her husband through hardship, wealth and scandal, until he returns chastened to the fold.

From the play, "Just a Woman," the story is not in any sense new, novel or unusual, but the direction has succeeded in moving the narrative at a rapid pace, with the locale and settings doing their share and the unceasing activity of Bickford carrying the weight of the pace.

The cast offers opportunity for exploitation, with Bickford and Miss Dunne of course foremost. Miss Dunne's popularity and ability are a foregone conclusion and selling her is up to the exhibitor. In support, and all performing ably, are Gwili Andre, the blonde, foreign-accented feminine menace in the Bickford-Dunne marital situation; Eric Linden, and Christian Rub, as the best of the assisting players.

The story moves from the squalor, noise and activity of a typical Pennsylvania steel mill town, which is atmospherically highly effective, to the lavishness of mansions and New York apartments, and back to the mill town, where the two, finally reconciled, are left to recommence a life which they had won away from. Miss Dunne marries Bickford as the film opens, and she makes drastic efforts to make him leave the squalor of the "hunky" town. Through the chemical discovery of young Linden, working with a byproduct of the mill, they achieve fame and immense fortune. The impulsive Bickford becomes entangled with Miss Andre, tries to divorce his wife. The crooked divorce proceedings reach the point of throwing dirt on the character of his wife, when Bickford comes to his senses, calls off the suit, and serves a sentence for perjury. The business smashed, he returns to the mill town and a job, where his wife finds him.

The rather time-worn story angle of wife and husband as outlined will necessarily have to be a selling angle, but with that the performances and persons of Miss Dunne and Bickford should be emphasized. Not great, not unusual, the film is nevertheless well executed, ably performed and contains those elements of entertainment which should find it reasonably successful at the exhibitor's box office.—Aaronson, New York.

Child of Manhattan

Romance—Drama

Here is a neat little romance-drama to which have been added several deft comedy touches and all made coherent by a novel suspense angle. Considered all together, these factors give it an audience interest unusual in the type of program picture that it is.

There's nothing startling or pretentious about it, although Nancy Carroll's acting is much more colorful than any of her most recent pictures and certain liberties have been taken with the development of the story which add to the interest.

The story is a simple down-to-earth proposition. The fabulously wealthy Vanderkill falls in love with the dancehall hostess, Madeline. Her family are not so sure of Paul's motives and when they characterize him as a wolf in sheep's clothing and term Madeline "a little tramp" for maintaining the association, she leaves home. These scenes, although full of heart interest, are nevertheless made comic by the dialogue and antics provided by Ma, Charlie and Sis.

In her luxurious apartment, Madeline discovers that she is to have a baby and the theme looks dangerous for a while, but it becomes understood that Paul is really proposing matrimony, secretly, on account of Paul's social position. The baby is born and dies, providing scenes which permit Madeline to become forcefully dramatic.

Madeline goes to Mexico for an easy divorce, without notifying her husband. The story turns lively again as she meets "Panama," a pal of her dancehall days, and promises to marry him as soon as she gets her divorce. A lawyer's visit to Paul complicates things in a hilarious, yet semi-tragic manner. The incident, however,

SET YOUR DATES for NANCY CARROLL in "CHILD of MANHATTAN" with JOHN BOLES puts him on his wife's trail and he arrives in her Mexican hideaway just in time to convince Madeline that he really loves her, and "Panama" makes things happy all around by proving that he is a swell guy.

Much can be done to attract better-than-average box offices. The names Miss Carroll and John Boles have a definite draw with widely varied types of patrons and this has been supplemented by the inclusion of "Buck" Jones in the cast—an angle which should stimulate some clever showmanship. Billing should emphasize that it is romance, drama and comedy, and the main advertising drive should be directed at the shop girls and stenographers in your locality; in other words the ages that patronize public dancehalls. Yet the more mature adults should not be ignored, as you have plenty to interest them.

One sequence, when Madeline is trying to tell Paul that she is going to have a baby, may prove to be a little too strongly suggestive for some minds, but the situation is cleared up later in the picture.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Edward Buzzell. Story by Preston Sturges. Screen play by Gertrude Purcell. Photographed by Teddy Tetzlaff. Release date, Feb. 4, 1933. Running time, 71 minutes.

Comedy Farce

Properly introduced, this should prove to be different and satisfactory entertainment in smaller cities. It's a comedy farce that assumes the acting and production technique demonstrated in "Screen Souvenirs," modernized along the lines exemplified in the Masquer Club efforts. In the smaller houses you'll probably find them, as the preview audience did, hissing the villains and cheering the heroes and their high theatrics.

The story, which first concerns the efforts of a picture company to find locations that will not immediately be usurped by real estate subdividers and hot dog stands, is a 10-20-30 mixup, to which there doesn't seem to be any head or tail. It becomes further ludicruously complicated when the company moves into Scarlet River Ranch and takes on the aspect of one of those vivid old harum-scarum westerns, which is never a western. It has the hero kayo one of the villains without having to pick himself up off the ground at all.

Such being the case, it opens the door for all kinds of queer advertising and exploitation. In the first place, don't announce it as a western. Try to strike a new note. It might be a good idea to tell your patrons to forget all about their Gables, Crawfords, Shearers, Marches, Garbos, Dietrichs, Gaynors and all the rest of the glamorous names; to forget their heart-moving romances and blood-quickening dramas; and come prepared to laugh and hoot and hiss at the picture's incongruities and absurdities.

The more kidding you do in advance, the better the audiences will understand that the only thing that awaits them is a hurly-burly hodgepodge of nonsense. The youngsters should go for this in a big way.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Otto Brower. Story and screen play by Harold Shumate. Photographed by Nick Musaraca. Release date, March 17, 1933. Running time, 57 minutes.

The Secret of Madame Blanche

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

Starting as a bright romance, animated by the atmosphere of a "gay 90" theatrical troupe voyaging to and playing in London, this production, formerly titled "The New Desire," suddenly turns into a ponderous human interest drama, whose motivating theme is motherly affection and sacrifice. To all intents and purposes it is almost exclusively a woman's picture, its chief hope for box office success dependent upon the interest with which the feminine part of patronage can be inspired.

In the story, sympathy continually accrues to the show girl, Sally, who, first spurning St. John's "proposition," marries him. Unable to make a go of the marriage, which has the opposition of the elder St. John, Leonard kills himself. Stranded, Sally is singing in a drab Marseilles cafe, but is happy with her baby. The older St. John legally abducts the child.

Years pass until it's 1918 and the war. St. John, Jr., entices a little French peasant girl, with whom he is enamored, to a Parisian cafe. Making himself obnoxious, he is beaten up, and the now aged proprietress, Sally, learns his name from Eloise. The reuniting of mother and son only leads to tragedy as the boy kills Eloise's father. In court, Sally tries to take the blame, but circumstances unearthed by the prosecuting attorney pin the guilt on the boy. In the climax, the boy in jail is visited by his mother and they plan a trip to America when his sentence has expired.

Despite the heaviness of the major portion of the picture, Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes and Douglas Wilton contribute effective performances, and where the first two names have any pull at the box office, they should be used to the maximum. Straight advertising and publicity will have to carry the brunt of the introductory campaign as there is nothing in the story that suggests special exploitation. A special "Mother's Matinee" for opening day might excite interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Charles Brabin. From the play "The Lady," by Martin Brown. Screen play by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett. Photographed by Merritt Gerstad. Release date, Feb. 4, 1933. Running time, 78 minutes.

The Bachelor Mother

(Goldsmith Pictures)

Drama

This is definitely program fare with little or nothing to bring it above that category. Its possibilities as entertainment unquestionably confine it to the smaller houses in the smaller towns.

Done in time-honored fashion as to story, it concerns the rich boy whose clever lawyer friend induces him to hire an inmate of the old ladies' home as his mother in order to escape a jail sentence for careless driving. The woman, played by Mary Seddon, believes it an adoption, not a "job." James Murray is the rich young man. He develops a fondness for Miss Seddon, and wants to adopt her as his mother in reality. He develops a different fondness for Evalyn Knapp, official at the home, but Astrid Allwyn temporarily disarranges that affair by claiming an engagement to Murray and revealing the truth to Miss Seddon.

The "mother" permits the boy to go to jail to offset the marriage plans of Miss Allwyn. Paroled, Murray engages in an altercation with Miss Allwyn. Miss Seddon shoots her to save Murray's life. There is a courtroom scene which borders on the ridiculous as each attempts a sacrifice for the other. It all comes straight in the end, of course, but there was never any reason to expect otherwise. Miss Knapp, Murray and Miss Seddon are the only players whose names could possibly mean anything to the audience at large.

There is in general an impression of weakness in the picture, from the standpoints of story, performance, development. The players are themselves reasonably capable, but they fail in their hard-working effort to make something of consequence of the elderly story. The exhibitor using the picture will be under the necessity of using the extremely conventional selling material for which a feature such as this calls.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Goldsmith Pictures, Directed by Charles Hutchison. Original story by Al Boasberg. Screen play by Paul Gangelin and Luther Reed. Release date, January 5, 1933. Running time, 71 minutes.

Second Hand Wife

(Fox)

Drama

Marital complications in a not uncommon form comprise the basic plot material for this drama, which has a selling advantage in the name of its leading performer, Sally Eilers. Miss Eilers' popularity is beyond question, and though her role here is not directly in line with the casting in which her audience is most accustomed to see her, she handles her part in a fashion to create sympathy, making stronger her physical attractiveness.

The story deviates but little from the pattern of many predecessors in one form or another, but its origin should prove a reasonably valuable selling point. It is an adaptation of a novel of the same title by Kathleen Norris, whose popularity, especially with feminine readers, should serve of itself to bring a certain number of women to the box office, if the fact is emphasized. Local book shops immediately become excellent tieup possibilities.

The narrative concerns the wealthy business man, Ralph Bellamy, his dissatisfied wife, Helen Vinson, and his secretary, Miss Eilers, who becomes his wife following his divorce. Sympathy falls with Miss Eilers, Miss Vinson being the scheming, unfaithful person in love with the violin teacher of the talented child, played by Karol Kay.

The office-wife and the child custody angles will naturally appeal most effectively to the women, especially when connected with the story's authorship. Aiming toward the masculine portion of the patronage, the exhibitor will have the angle of the business man, the wife lacking affection and the competent and lovable secretary.

The picture is entertaining, and the performances are quite adequate. The selling must be more or less along conventional lines for this sort of picture. It is adult fare, of course.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From the novel by Kathleen Norris. Screen play by Hamilton MacFadden. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Photographed by Charles Clarke. Sound recorder, A. L. Von Kirbach. Release date, January 1, 1933. Running time, 64 minutes.

TRAILING THE KILLER

This shouldn't be confused with the average jungle picture. It's far too good for that. 'Trailing the Killer' as a whole is in a class by itself. It is a great picture and will entertain all classes of fans.

There are plenty of thrills in "Trailing the Killer," not the least of which is a sequence showing Lobo killing a rattlesnake, which is on full par for excitement with that famous Ufa short, "Killing the Killer."

Here is a picture that affords both novel and exciting entertainment.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Dallas, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

We would like to suggest to those who are trying to find a remedy for this socalled Depression, that they get Vash Young's book, "Let's Start Over Again," and read it, especially the ninth and concluding chapter, in which, among other things, he says:

"Everywhere people are wondering about the future. Business organizations are uncertain in their policies. Individuals glance fearfully ahead. 'What does the future have in store for us?' they ask. That question, to millions of men and women, has become the most important of the day; but to my way of thinking it is the wrong one to ask. The mere asking of it comes perilously close to an admission of doubt, and doubt always weakens action. The question we should be asking ourselves today is not the passive, almost negative, 'What does the future have in store for us?' but the aggressive, positive query, 'What do we have in store for the future?'

"This is no time for wringing our hands impatiently, furrowing our brows with the frowns of resentment and regret, clouding our vision with gloom and pessimism while waiting for the future to pour riches into our laps. Riches, whether material or spiritual, never follow such an attitude of mind and heart."

Just go back and read that over again; it won't hurt you a bit, and then ask yourself whether you are sitting down and waiting for a rainbow to be cast across your pathway or making some effort to remedy the situation. The remedy lies within ourselves. Just keep that in your minds. The Republican administration hasn't been able to cure it and the Democrats won't know any more about it.

The result of the last election indicated that a large majority of the people are expecting Beer and Prosperity to come marching back hand in hand. We hope they do, for we would relish a little of both right now, but personally we don't think they will; they travel in opposite directions; but if they do, we'll meet 'em at the front gate and lock arms and march down the highway of prosperity together.

We realize that a lot of people will say we are crazy. We hope they do, for when they tell us we are crazy it is evident that blank minds have started to function, and when the public mind begins to function and realizes that prosperity depends upon individual effort and not upon the Government, we will begin to see our way out of the woods.

If you theatremen have a motto over your desks reading "All things come to those who wait," tear it down and throw it into the waste basket and put this one up, "Time and tide wait for no man," then buckle that belt up another notch and tell Uncle Sam to keep his beans and sowbelly—you are going after your own.

We have met a lot of delightful people around the exchanges here in Dallas. These Longhorns are certainly the salt of the earth and the hope of Texas (if there is any hope for Texas) and we will leave here with pleasant memories and some regrets, with a consciousness that we will find a big snow shovel waiting us on our front porch when we get home.

The mail has just brought us a batch of Christmas greetings. Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Snyder of Okley, Kan., send us their best wishes. Lyle Talbot, a Warner Bros. player in Hollywood, sends us a picture of a guy lifting a cocktail glass and says "Here's how to wish you a Merry Christmas."

We knew Lyle when his mother used to spank him for not telling her about it, but he's a big boy now, and we predict that it won't be long until his name will shine forth in the electric lights.

Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Ill., and Dinty Doneldson of Omaha, Neb., both send us Christmas greetings on toilet paper. That's all right, because these are trying times and those boys are trying to make both ends meet. We commend them for their spirit of economy and their desire to be useful.

The mail also brought us the sad announcement of the passing of our good friend, Crockett Brown of Nashwauk, Minn. We regret to learn this, for that community has lost a valuable citizen and the picture industry an important factor, and we have lost a very good friend. The HERALD, as well as ourself, extends to the family our deepest sympathy.

It might be well to pause here and take a backward glance over the 365 days that have come and gone and to take an invoice of our past to determine whether or not we have accomplished anything worth while. We have said a lot of things that probably we should not have said, and for which we now offer our sincere apologies. We have tramped on a lot of you birds, but a lot of you had it coming to you. We have advocated a lot of theories, and you have shown your good judgment by not paying any attention to a lot of them. That's one of the hopes for the future of this industry.

We have tried to point out some of the defects in this business, only to find that we have been barking up the wrong sapling. We have tried to tell you that the success of your business will depend largely upon your individual energy and initiative.

And so, as we glance over the past, we arrive at the conclusion that this business would have survived, even without the fatherly advice and counsel of this rambling columnist.

But we are approaching a new day. We are entering upon a new period. The mistakes we have made in the past should be helpful to guide us away from the mudholes of the future. The time will never come when the highway to success will be free from mudholes. There will always be detours. At times the pavement will be slippery and it will be a good thing to keep a firm hold on the wheel and not step too hard on the gas. We have seen a lot of wrecks along the highways, the most of which could have been avoided by the use of a little common sense.

If there was ever a time when common sense was needed in this business it is right now. The road is going to be rough and full of chuckholes, but we have seldom seen a road we couldn't travel if we made up our mind to, and if we meet that old guy anywhere along the route we are going to kick the whey out of him. So now, if you want a seat in our car just hop right in; otherwise you can hoof it; but don't try to flag us down after we get going—we never stop for hitchhikers.

RKO Seeking Lower Rentals

At the suggestion of DeWitt Millhauser, a partner of Speyer and Company, Wall Street banking house, and a director of RKO, that the Speyer firm might assist in bringing about reductions in theatre rentals and adjustments of mortgages, Ralph Wolf has begun activity along these lines.

Mr. Wolf will work with Louis Cohen, theatre operator who recently joined RKO, to bring about reductions in fixed charges. Mr. Wolf is also a member of the Speyer company.

Kohn Named Aid To Adolph Zukor

Ralph A. Kohn, treasurer of Paramount, has been named executive assistant to Adolph Zukor by the executive committee of the corporation. Mr. Kohn will continue to function in his other posts, as treasurer, as vice-president of Paramount Productions, Inc., Paramount Picture Distributing Corporation, and a member of the company board of directors and executive committee.

Katz Fails of Re-election To Balaban and Katz Board

Sam Katz failed of re-election to the directorate of Balaban and Katz, Chicago circuit, it was announced at a stockholders' meeting this week. Mr. Katz had resigned his executive post with the company at the time of his resignation from Publix, it was said. F. L. Meltzer, another director, was not re-elected. To the board were added Charles A. McCulloch, co-receiver for Middle West Utilities, and Walter Immerman, vice president of the circuit.

Two Fox Circuit Receiverships Extended

Efforts are being made by W. E. Atkinson, a co-receiver for Fox Theatres Corporation, to induce Harry C. Arthur to continue as operating head of Fox New England Theatres, a subsidiary, operating 16 houses.

Receiverships for two Fox circuits have been extended by the courts, each for six months. Judge Mack yesterday morning continued the present receivership of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses for another half year with Irving Trust Co. and Simon Fabian as co-receivers. Fox Theatres Corporation, for which William E. Atkinson and John F. Sherman are co-receivers, was granted an extension January 10.

7th Ave Roxy Keeps Policy

The Seventh avenue Roxy announced this week that it would maintain its present policy of feature pictures and stage shows. A new cut in prices beyond that of the 35-cent balcony price at all times was also announced. Starting next week, all seats will be 25 cents until 1 P. M., and from 1 until 6 P. M. the orchestra price will be 40 cents, and the balcony 35 cents to closing. After 6 P. M., orchestra price will be 55 cents to closing.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston—A very good picture that won many comments. I mailed 32 letters about this picture to bank directors and officers here. Two of them came to see the picture. Played Dec. 6-7.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

THE BIG TIMER: Ben Lyon, Constance Cummings—A prize fight story, but a very good one, well attended and pleased all, me too. You can't go wrong with this, lots of action. Played Jan. 3-4.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—A good Saturday night picture.—Charles Wiles, Wiles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—One of the season's best pictures and should be good for any house. While it did not follow the original novel, the comments were all favorable, even from those who had read the book. Drew far better than average and was well liked. Barthelmess is getting too old to play such parts. Played Dec. 26-27. Running time, 78 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

THE CRASH: Ruth Chatterton—If your patrons like Chatterton, you will get them on this one. If not, then it is just too bad, for this is her poorest picture. Drew for us because star is a favorite here. Did not satisfy all but went over to a big business. Short running time allows for plenty of good shorts to build up program. Played Dec. 31. Running time, 58 minues.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

FIVE STAR FINAL: Edward G. Robinson—I was late running this picture but I want to say to every exhibitor who has not already done so to buy it and run it as soon as possible. The print is still good, and your patrons will come out to see it, and go home and send their friends and relations the second and third nights. One of the finest pictures of all time. Take it from me. Get it and run it regardless of age. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MISS PINKERTON: Joan Blondell—A good mystery play, but too many wisecracks from John Blondell and some of them fall flat. This girl is a swell little actress and the female detective part would have been more effective if they had let her play it straight, just as Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote the story. Played Dec. 24-25.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre. Mason, Mich. General patronage.

TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Just the kind of picture for right now. One big belly laugh from start to finish. Thrills, comedy, action, romance, heart interest—everything to make a good show. I still maintain that the best thing in the world is a good story and next good players, but "the play's the thing," says old Bill Shakespeare and that still holds good. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Drama with tense situations and plenty of excitement. Not this star's best picture, but novel plot can be played up, for it is a new idea. Some patrons thought it a bit too gruesome, but on the whole the picture was well liked. Business just average, probably due to the days it played. Played Dec. 23-24. Running time, 80 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

Paramount

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott and Sally Blaine—A good western, with wonderful herds of wild horses. Personally I liked it, but my western crowd are all broke, and consequently I can't get them out on this class of picture any more.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—This is an excellent picture. Good story, good cast and Bow gets the money.—Charles Wiles, Wiles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Grand hokum for the kids and those who have followed the radio broadcasts. Not to be taken seriously, and with that idea in mind, will afford plenty of laughs and thrills. The kids ate it up and the older folks had a good time. Drew far above average and in our case, pleased a good 90 per cent of the patrons. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 74 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

1790 Broadway, New York

DELICIOUS: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Just a sweet story and a good picture. Charley Farrell much better in this than in "The First Year." Gaynor very good as the Scotch lassie. Photography and Sound okay. It looks like Charley had a haircut. —S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—A typical Rogers picture of the program variety.—Charles Wiles, Wiles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Up to the Rogers standard, pleased 100 per cent and drew average business for two days. The story hits the spot and gives Rogers a good chance to get off some good stuff about the depression. If your patrons like Rogers, this one is in as a box office attraction. Played Dec. 25-26. Running time, 81 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Business good. Rogers' fans were well pleased. Played Jan. 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A grand picture and liked by all who saw it, but for some reason this pair are losing their drawing power. Above average business. Played Dec. 24-25. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Average program picture. Played Dec. 14-15. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Considered "cute" and enjoyable by everyone. Played Jan. 1-2.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Was disappointed in this. Did not draw any too good and did not please as well as expected. A man's picture. Played Dec. 28-29. Running time, 66 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—A good entertainment, a burlesque on college football. Business fair.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—As good as one could wish for. Pleased 100 per cent. Above average at box office. Played Nov. 23-24.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—Good entertainment and drew well.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—Drew fair business and pleased. A bit unusual for a theme, but we need something different more often. Played Jan. 4-5. Running time, 80 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—A picture you will be proud of. Should please everyone except those who want smut only. Should be especially appealing to those religiously inclined. Baxter, Boles and Miriam Jordan are all ideally suited to their parts. Has an unhappy ending, but in this case it would have been almost impossible to end it otherwise without ruining story. Running time: 75 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—The very best Rogers to date. Just a simple story told in a simple way by simple, plain folks, but, boy, how they ate it up. Clean, wholesome story, with excellent dialogue. This shows that people still know and like real entertainment. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell, Eugene Pallette—Everyone liked this picture and raved about Eugene Pallette. The only objection we heard was "Where did the Wild Girl get her finger wave?" Played Dec. 25-26.—Elaine S. Furlongs, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. General patronage.

Mayfair

HONOR OF THE PRESS: Edward J. Nugent—Not bad. Played Dec. 18.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BEN HUR: Ramon Navarro—Fine business. Picture makes you realize the progress that has been made since it was turned out. No complaints on lack of dialogue. Small towns should play this. Played Christmas.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—The word "Divorce" should never have been put in the title of a picture starring a kid. Good picture to mediocre business. Played Jan. 3.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

EMMA: Marie Dressler—Will please all that see it. Director to be complimented in not showing persons dying or after death. Played Jan. 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards—A talkie with the action of a silent. Edwards is good for a lot of laughs. Pleased the customers. Sure a novelty to have some action on the screen. Title misleading unless you tell the story. Played Dec. 20-21. —Glenn Cardwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery, Karen Morley—Picture failed to please and also failed to do any business with it. Beery very good in his part but story not good. Plenty of smut and no comedy at all. Picture ought to do a swell business over in Germany. Played Jan. 5-6.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—Well, after reading how all the small towns had been having only fair success with this picture and the general dislike for the story, we were very pleasingly surprised. It not only satisfied us but we had a large number of patrons go out of their way to tell us how well they liked it. Played Jan. 1-2-3. Running time, 115 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Good picture but a box office flop for me.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfordt, Kansas.

NEW MORALS FOR OLD: Lewis Stone, Robert Young—A splendidly acted drama of an old plot. This Young fellow (no pun) is a comer. Your patrons, if you can get them in, will find this fine entertainment. Drew better than average for us and satisfied everyone. Played Dec. 28-29. Running time, 77 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and Hardy—Good business and swell funny picture. Real comedy invention in the battle tank scene. Played Christmas.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clarke Gable—The same old "Devil Tropics" but the customers seemed to like it. No go for kiddies. Played Dec. 22-23.—Glenn Cardwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Warren William—Just fair. While I liked it there wasn't much response from the audience. Business fair. Running time, 80 minutes. —Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Warren William—For same reason this did not pull for us, but it is a mighty fine picture. Splendidly acted, a new idea in plot, marvelous settings, but we could not get them in. Those who came were loud in their praises and surprised that they had found it so entertaining. Played Jan. 1. Running time, 100 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—You can stand at the door and meet them when they come out on this picture. They'll tell you that it was just a little bit better than the best picture they ever saw. I didn't do much on it because of the cold weather, but am trying to trade it for a return date. I'd be better off, if I didn't do much on the return. Played Dec. 15-16. Running time, 100 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton—This will make them all roll in the aisles. A very funny comedy with Jimmy Durante stealing the show. Running time, 82 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—Can't see where this picture will create any extra business. Helen Hayes turns in a swell bit of acting, but that is all. Three of about the coldest-blooded killings in the last reel that you ever looked at. Sent all the kids out scared to death and most of the grown-ups not pleased. Played Jan. 4.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

WET PARADE: Walter Huston, Dorothy Jordon—Pleased neither wets nor drys. One mile too long. Drew first day only. Pass it up. Played Dec. 19-20. Running time, 117 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Monogram

LAND OF WANTED MEN: Andy Shuford, Bill Cody—Not so hot. The hero is just too small for such heavy work. He bounced back every time he hit the villain and they had to wait until he got his balance. And how those boys stood around just to get knocked down. They didn't get to them fast enough. Played Dec. 17.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Lelia Hyam, radio stars—One grand picture for Christmas. Was generally very well liked by our patrons and only goes to show that we should have more musicals. Played Dec. 25-26. Running time, 85 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Lelia Hyam, radio stars—A dandy picture that pulls the small town folks. Not much to the story, but it doesn't need any. Everyone that has a radio will be there. Family picture. Played Dec. 25-26.—Glenn Cardwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—A fairly good picture that did only fair at the box office. Running time, 85 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herb Marshall, Sari Maritza—An excellent picture that will please all. Plenty of comedy from Charlie Ruggles.—Charles Wiles, Wiles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Good, if you run Westerns. Played Jan. 7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Very nice little show holding up to the usual Zane Grey western standard. Blane makes a very nice western lassie. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 58 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—A very good western plus Zane Grey's name means business at the box office. Pleased all and they are asking me when the next one is coming. Running time, 59 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—In a business ridden with imitation, this stands out as a new idea. It gets money and gives your patrons a change from a steady diet of standardized, machine made, tasteless, film "manufacture." Business very good. Played Dec. 28.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Cold wave interfered with attendance. Those who did attend were pleased with the exception of now and then a person who objected because they considered it a bit risque. Played Dec. 14-15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Not so hot and the poorest of this star's pictures. If he is a natural for you, then you are safe. Chevalier needs Ernest Lubitsch to put him over and this director apparently realizes this and tried to follow along these lines. The results were hardly successful. Only fair business and pleased the French star's fans, but not the others who came to be entertained. Played Jan. 2-3. Running time, 90 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—A finely directed and well acted picture from Paramount, but my opinion is the average exhibitor in small towns will have a hard time putting it over. Outside of it being a well known Belasco play, it has no other drawing power. Played Jan. 9-10.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill .

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie—A good show from beginning to end. Paramount has been putting out fine programs this year so far. Sure hope they continue to do so. This picture has some fine shots of Madison Square Garden and while it is a story of boxing it will please women as well as men. I played this Christmas and it made a fine show. Running time, 74 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Plenty of laughs and pleased the few who came to see it. I still can't figure out why they stayed away from this picture. I sure lost plenty. Played Dec. 12-13-14. Running time, 96 minutes.—Mayme P. Mussellman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Satisfied majority but drew only moderately. Believe Llyod should produce oftener to keep public interested. Played Dec. 7-8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan, Jimmy Durante, Claudette Colbert—Political pictures like football picture "date." Played it too late and did bad business. Good but by no means great picture. Business bad.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phil Holmes, Charles Ruggles—Don't pass this one up. It's a swell dish any way you look at it. Pleased 100 per cent. Did no extra business but no fault of picture. Nothing brings them in when they are broke. Ruggles steals picture. Played Dec. 31 and Jan. 1. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis.

UNDERCOVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Picture drew very well and everyone seemed to enjoy it. George Raft is clever and Nancy Carroll unusually good. Sort of a gangster picture, but story very interesting and no one will object to it. Played Jan. 7.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

Principal

WITH WILLIAMSON BENEATH THE SEA: Authentic undersea picture which is pleasant diversion from the flock of wild animal stuff released to date. Contacted the schools and the kids sure came out and brought the parents with them. Owing to being more or less educational in theme, despite some swell thrills, advisable to show with a regular dramatic feature as well.—Eddie Rivers, Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge—Just another picture that our business would have been better off if it had never been made. It's very suggestive and is not good entertainment for any kind of audience. Some of the flappers and drug store cowboys thought it very good but their parents thought it was awful and did not hesitate to tell me so. If they act like the characters in this one at the state universities we had all better keep our kids at home. Played Dec. 27. Running time, 60 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

ARE THESE OUR CHILDREN: Eric Linden, Arline Judge—Haven't had so many comments in years as this picture evoked, mainly from the older people, who thought it was a very timely lesson for the younger generation. It certainly is a tear-jerker. Arline Judge stands out like a lighthouse in the flip flapper role. Played Dec. 27-28.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—A few women cried over it and the men asked where we got it. First day below average; second day 50 per cent less than first day. Not what small town audiences want for entertainment. Liberty's four stars caused me to tell my patrons it was a special. But it is not. It takes more than just talk and a one room setting to entertain family patronage. Played Jan. 2-3. Running time, 76 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

FANNY FOLEY HERSELF: Edna May Oliver—A very pleasing picture all in beautiful technicolor. Played Dec. 20-21.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

IS MY FACE RED?: Helen Twelvetrees, Ricardo Cortez—One of Cortez's best yet, pleased all patrons, and drew well considering times. Played Jan. 5-6. Running time, 60 minutes.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Children all came. Adults all stayed home. Adults today won't accompany their children even in town of seven thousand as remote as this. Children patronage don't pay and above all don't advertise your house or pictures. Producers will wake up in ten or twelve years to fact they should lay off straight kid stuff. Picture was a flop. Played Dec. 27.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea—Lay off this one. It's one of those things best left in the exchange's film vaults. If you do have to play it, double bill with another feature along the comedy lines, or build up a strong program of shorts and take the night off. Business just average and for once we were glad that no more came to see it than did. Played Dec. 24. Running time, 78 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix—The title frightened some people away. General comment was "Good picture but too much killing." Played Dec. 13.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwili Andre—Good hokum melodrama and we don't get nearly enough hokum since the producers have gone decadent. Gwili Andre should play leads in a wax works. Business good. Talk about the "Sphinxlike City of Paris" and its wonderful system of secret police in your advertisements. Played Jan. 1.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne, George Ratoff—Just another mystery story and not so much mystery after you see the first few feet of the story. Pleased some but others thought it very poor. Did not draw average business on our cheap admission night. Played Dec. 30. Running time, 73 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Tiffany

MAN FROM HELL'S EDGES: Bob Steele—A fair Western. Good for Saturday. Played Dec. 10. Running time, 61 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THOSE WE LOVE: Mary Astor—A better than average program picture. It is built for the lady patrons and went over big with them. The men thought it was not so hot. Drew a few dollars more at the box office than Maurice Chevalier did on the same night the week before. I think "Those We Love" deserves a little extra boosting on the dates you play it with advertising aimed at the women and girls. Played Dec. 23. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

United Artists

ARROWSMITH: Ronald Colman—Artistic rating, 100 per cent. Financial rating, minus. Played, Dec. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden—A very fine picture. Well liked but did not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Gloria Stuart—Football pictures are not so hot till you see this. It's not another "Spirit of Notre Dame," but it's the best gridiron yarn we've screened since "Notre Dame." Business 30 per cent above average.—Eddie Rivers, Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Excellent. Miss Dunne is sure one sweet actress. The only criticism to make with the production: it showed Boles dying and much footage after death, which detracted from, instead of adding to. Have never heard a person say they liked to see death scenes and they can be implied so easily. Played Jan 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles, Irene Dunne—Those who could come, did so. Practically unanimous praise. Very gratifying. Played Dec. 28-29.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. General patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—A women's picture and special appeal should be made to them. One of the finest acted pictures of any year. The ladies will talk about this one. No go for the kiddies. Played Dec. 29-30.—Glenn Cardwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles, Irene Dunne—Booked extra day and could have held over. Best woman's picture we have played in months. Doubled regular business and now have booked for a re-run. People still talking about it. No extra campaign needed; half the town has heard about it or read the book.—Eddie Rivers, Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. Small town patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD: George Sidney, Charlie Murray—Only fair business weather and basket ball opposition. Played Dec. 17. —C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown, Maureen O'Sullivan, Mickey Rooney, James Gleason—A dandy program picture. If you have not played it, spot it on some Saturday; you'll not regret it. Mickey is great. Played Jan. 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown—Pleasing performance. Played Dec. 3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie, Louise Fazenda, Sidney Fox—Good business. Picture won't please all but most. Best laugher will be the exhibitor. Fazenda does swell work in this. Its great name insures business. Played Jan. 1.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

RACING YOUTH: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts, Tom Brown—This picture pleased, but drew lightly. Played Dec. 10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong, Lila Lee—This seemed to click. Fair business. Played Dec. 11-12.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

TEXAS BAD MAN: Tom Mix—Tom and Tony still carry their good oldtime box-office draw in this town at least. The kids all flock out and bring the parents with them. It's a pleasure to play a well done Western and we for one are sorry that Tom is again to quit pictures.—Eddie Rivers, Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. Small town patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—A swell family entertainment but no draw.—Eddie Rivers, Granada Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho. Small town patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—Very nice business and a performance that pleased everyone. Played Dec. 31.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTY AND THE BOSS: Warren William—We had this one set for two days and heard from another exhibitor that it was not so hot at the box office or on the screen. We set it back for a one-day date and after seeing it, I would say we did the right thing. It's a good little program picture and drew 10% of average business on the night it played. Some of the dialogue is rather warm in spots. Played Jan. 3. Running time, 66 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Here is a peach of a picture that all classes pronounced very good and came to see. On Sunday and Monday it drew better than average business by 25%. It was a pleasure to run a picture like this. It's a little off-color in spots but they seemed to like the way it was put over and we had no kicks from anyone. Go after business with this good one, there are few and far between these days. Played Jan. 1-2. Running time, 84 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE CROWD ROARS: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—A very good picture and well pleased; this picture should do a good business on any day, an all star cast. Played Dec. 31. Running time, 75 minutes.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: William Powell, Kay Francis—Another good one which was shown to empty seats. Played Dec. 17-18.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Charles "Chic" Sale—We gave this one an extra boost in advertising and it drew far above our expectations at the box office and pleased everyone who saw it. It's the kind of picture that will please any small town show crowd, for they know what it's all about. There is no sex, no booze, and no off-color dialogue in this one. Perhaps that is why our patrons went out after seeing it the first day and sent their friends in to see it on the second day. The day you run this one you have a show. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett, Neil Hamilton—A mighty nice show for anyone to look at. Pleased 100% and drew better than average business. Many thought it the best Bennett has given us in a long time. You can do a little extra boosting of this one and it will make good for you. Played Dec. 28-29. Running time, 70 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

A RESOLUTION WORTH WHILE

The writer, like many thousands of exhibitors, sincerely appreciates your efforts of the past, and the renewal of "What the Picture Did for Me" comes again at a time when most of us need it more than ever.

I regret that I have not been a constant contributor to this before, but with the new year one of my resolutions is to be "a report per week"; so kindly mail a supply of blanks.—L. Brewerton, Manager, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alta.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—A peach. But did not draw half of film rental. The 12 who saw it were highly pleased. Played Dec. 21-22.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis.

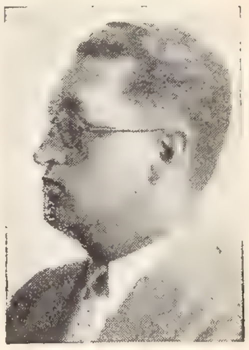
MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor



DISCUSSING A TOPIC of this sort is not always a a desirable task because there is so much difference of opinion among managers as to what they think of the idea. Yet, the really efficiently run theatre is most always a house wherein the various members of the staff, regardless of how many or how few, can step into other shoes and function smoothly.

A manager must keep in mind the ever-possible danger of illness, accident or call out-of-town that will make it necessary for his help to continue the proper operation of his house in his absence. To go along on the theory that you will always be there yourself and that you need never lean or depend on others is a foolish point of view and charged with much dynamite. Proper coaching of a competent assistant will take care of such an emergency when it arises.

THE NECESSITY FOR efficient help to keep that house going along right is best explained by the many slants that must constantly be watched and anticipated before they cause trouble. Even the small, yet important detail of sound volume control will bring home to you the importance of having someone on the floor besides yourself who will keep his ear trained to the sound and signal the booth accordingly.

The same slant is applicable to all other phases of theatre operation and if your assistant has been broken in to every duty in connection with running the house, then you are indeed a smart manager. In turn, the chief-of-staff, or head usher if you will, ought to be able to assume the assistant's work; the doorman to jump in and take care of the furnace, etc., etc., right on down the line. In other words, to keep the house covered at all times so that there is a minimum of chance of any one detail being overlooked by reason of any one man leaving his post. After all, these are just the A B C's of good business.

THERE EXISTED, AT ONE TIME, a foolish notion that if you made your assistant too efficient he would eventually take your job away from you. Well, if any man is that much afraid of his job then we'll venture the guess that he'll lose it anyway. Bosses who are good business men, and most of them are, other opinions notwithstanding, are the first to appreciate good organization and the development of manpower. Where they find a manager capable of running his theatre and his help along such lines they will, in most cases, select him for promotion when the first important opening occurs. And one of the reasons he is so selected is becaue the boss knows that he can step out of his house at a moment's notice and leave that house running in tip-top condition.

DON'T COAST ALONG on foolish theories. Break in your assistant to do everything you do, subject to your approval and supervision. Let him inject his own ideas and encourage him if they are good, or correct him if they are not. Make him feel important without becoming overbearing in his attitude to the rest of the help. And by all means encourage him to train the head usher or doorman in all the duties of the assistant.

Weekly meetings of the entire staff, not fashioned along the circuit idea of military tactics, but rather in a warm and friendly spirit, will promote a feeling of mutual cooperation from top to bottom that would be hard to beat in a pinch. From these meetings you can generally get to know which of your staff are anxious to make show-business their life's vocation and which of them are just holding their jobs as stop-gaps until something they like better turns up. Where you find good material for show-business, develop it as much as you can.

Many successful men have stated that their greatest accomplishments in life were not merely making money or building up a business; they were in developing youth and manpower, to which they attribute no small measure for their eventual success.

BY THE TIME THIS GOES to press we will be riding the roads of Ohio on a short trip to visit Nat Holt and his RKO boys as well as some of those other Round Tablers whom we last visited in 1928 . . . with many fond memories of that Convention up at Cedar Point. (Shades of Tim Roberts, Ed Heihle, "Ducky" Meyers, Pete Wood, "Admiral" Himmeloin, Gus Sun and about two dozen others.)

We always look forward with great pleasure to these trips because they afford us the much-needed opportunity of meeting personally men we have been corresponding with for many years. For this same reason we are getting set to invade the Southern States next month. The greatest number of Charter Members when the Club was first organized were from the South and most of them are still the best contributors we have. It will certainly be swell to visit them and talk shop. "We'll be seeing you."

MANAGER NIBLER'S FREE PONY RIDES FIXED OPPOSITION

When playing "Wild Horse Mesa"—a Zane Grey picture—Miss Theresa Nibler, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Springfield, Mo., and her assistant, Wilton Gross, fought opposition in the form of another picture with juvenile appeal by giving children free rides in a pony cart each afternoon during run of picture.

We are advised that this pony cart stunt not only proved to be a natural for the youngsters, but also attracted the grownups. As many as three to four kiddies were put in the cart at a time and one of the boys on the staff led the pony to guard against any possible accident. The figure of the white horse shown in the background of the accompanying photo was a model obtained from a local saddlery concern. The pony and cart were secured through a tie-up with a local stable.

Miss Nibler is also running a radio stunt at this time through a tie-up made with a dealer in a popular set. Details are lacking at this writing but we presume a local broadcasting station has been tied-in to provide broadcasting facilities for local, amateur talent, later to be featured on the theatre stage. The radio dealer is supplying a silver loving cup to the entertainer who receives the most votes. Whether a newspaper also figured in the tie-up we do not know.

Perhaps Miss Nibler will furnish the Round Table with full information about her plan, as well as word on other activities at her theatre. We believe this is the first report we've received on the Paramount since she became manager and we will be glad to welcome her into Club circles.

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.

—THANK YOU.

H. JAUDON USED ONE CENT SALE IDEA AS TWO-FOR-ONE STUNT

The old familiar One Cent Sale idea, employed by merchants the country over, was used as a Two-for-One gag during Xmas Week by Howard Jaudon, of Gulf Theatres, Inc., Tampa, Fla., to keep attendance at peak at the Tampa Theatre, ace Sparks house in the city.

The occasion was called "Your Xmas Gift Week" and after a series of teaser statements in newspaper ads it was announced that by adding one cent to the regular admission (with coupon clipped either from ads or program) all theatre patrons might enjoy the privilege of bringing along a guest.

The above gag was not confined to the Tampa, but was in force at all Sparks houses in the city. We also understand the same idea was used in Sparks houses in Miami. At any rate, Round Tablers, it's another variation of the two-for-one idea, and if you feel like trying it out, take it with Jaudon's compliments. He and the Sparks gang down in Florida are all on their toes these days and we'll be on watch for a lot of good trade boosting tips to pass along the line.

LYMAN CIRCULATED XMAS HERALDS WITH EXCELLENT RESULTS

An Xmas trade building stunt employed this past season by C. T. Lyman, manager of the Plaza Theatre, Milwaukee, consisted of house-to-house distribution of 8,000 program heralds sealed inside a "Do Not Open Until Xmas" envelope. Copy on the envelope was printed in red and decorated with a couple of Xmas candles in holders. The herald set forth the full week's program and carried the management's appreciation of past patronage and sincere good wishes for 1933.

This is the first report the Club has had on Lyman's activities and we'll be on watch for many others. He's located around the corner from Louis "Eagle" Orlove, a dyed-in-the-wool Round Tabler, and between the two of these showmen this department ought to be kept posted on what's going on in their neighborhoods.

"Man Against Microbe"

¶ When the Black Death swept Europe in the Middle Ages millions died. Terror stalked across the kingdoms of the world and nothing could stop it. All the medicines and devices of the crude science of the day were of no avail. And down the years the lesser plagues took their toll.

¶ Then came Louis Pasteur, with microscope and cultures and test tubes and the bacterial origin of many maladies was established. The tiny demons of disease were revealed. The villain in humanity's greatest drama had been identified. It is part of a great story of and for humanity which is offered to theatre screens in one reel.

¶ The picture contains no advertising and no propaganda save that in the great broad cause of human life and health. It is not an argument for insurance or anything else but health. But the 25,000 agents of Metropolitan Life and their many millions of clients and prospects are cooperatively interested.

Available to theatres without cost. Write or wire that you want to play it and give three tentative play dates.

B & K SHOWMEN PUT OVER XMAS PAGEANT THAT PACKED HOUSES

Acting upon a suggestion made three years ago in "Public Opinion," Balaban & Katz, showmen in Chicago, staged a yuletide pageant this past Pre-Xmas Season which drew nearly a half-million people to the downtown theatre and shopping district and packed both stores and theatres for the day. The stunt was repeated four Saturdays in succession to equal advantage.

The accompanying photo will convey but a faint idea of the magnitude of the Toy Parade that delighted thousands of youngsters from all sections of the city. Balaban & Katz led the parade with a platoon of ushers carrying banners advertising current and coming attractions. All company theatres tied-in with the event by running special trailers.

Except for cost of advertising banners the theatres got away scot-free, not even doing any of the work beyond selling the idea to the merchants. The pageant was a most colorful affair, consisting of animated, life-size replicas of toys, old Santa himself and many attractive floats that represented Mother Goose stories, etc. A miniature locomotive was provided by the C. & N. W. R. R. Company and the Salvation Army sent its "Taximeter Mule." A well organized band furnished music.

It's too late now, of course, for Club members to get out and promote a stunt of this sort among local merchants, but it looks like a darned good one to file away for next season. Anything which can step up trade over the Xmas-slump period the way this one did is worth consideration.

Take the annual Macy Parade in New York City, for instance, which each year packs the streets and has hundreds of thousands of necks out of joint in efforts to catch a glimpse of Tony Sarg's grotesque balloon animals when these are released after the parade down Broadway. What this does for Macy's store can also be done for any other institution, even if the parade has to be scaled down to suit.

Anyway, congratulations to the B. & K. men for putting over a spectacle which paid them many times over for their efforts. Incidentally, the full plan for this Publix yuletide stunt is available in the indexed, bound volumes.

McHENRY FEEDS HIS PUBLIC VARIETY OF NOVEL COPY IN ADS

Popularly known in Dallas, Texas, as "Uncle Mac," C. R. McHenry, owner-operator of the Texas, Rosewin and Midway Theatres, daily advertises in newspapers his thoughts on pictures, or whatever his mood may prompt.

His frankness has been occasion for reprimands now and then from those in the picture distribution field, but, on the other hand, reaped its reward in public confidence. He gives his opinions on product for what they're worth, he states, and if he pans a picture and the folk like it, so much the better.

SUGGS BROUGHT OUT ENTIRE POPULATION ON AUTO GIFT NIGHT

It took the give-away of a new auto to convince M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., that there are as many people in town as indicated by the last census. On the night of the event the entire street was blockaded by an excited horde of usually staid citizens, all intent on finding out the identity of the person to become the owner of a brand new, shiny product of one of the country's largest automobile manufacturers. In addition to the auto twenty-three other valuable articles were awarded.

The deal was made possible through a tie-up with the Retail Merchants' Association, which resulted in a world of publicity. The local newspaper carried about eight full pages concerning the auto give-away and, in addition, distributed 35,000 regular size newspaper sheets in Bristol and towns within a radius of 50 miles. The car made appearance in main downtown streets every day for two weeks in advance, adorned with a banner stating it would be given away from the stage of the Paramount Theatre on the advertised date. A model was also brought into the theatre lobby for inspection one week in advance, along with the display of other awards. The deal was handled on the usual merchandise sales policy, both from stores and theatre.

De luxe give-aways have been defended and condemned the past season by members of this industry but the fact remains that such practice has generally resulted in creating a whale of a lot of interest in the theatre and all concerned in the tie-up. As in other instances, all the deal cost Suggs was his time spent effecting the tie-up and the box office was stimulated to a marked extent.

This department is advised through R. M. SHEPHERD PUT OVER ANNIVERSARY STUNTS FOR BILTMORE HOUSE

A report from Miami, Fla., informs the Club that Sonny Shepherd, manager of the Mayfair and Biltmore Theatres there, very successfully celebrated a birthday for the Biltmore by staging a variety of attractions.

One of the photos shows the resourceful Sonny himself, standing on the steps of the building that houses the "Miami News" and directing a show for the Thanksgiving Festival of the Homemakers Club of that paper. As usual, Sonny's famous Mickey Mousers demonstrated their unquestioned talent.

During the Anniversary celebration tables and chairs were set out on the sidewalk, as shown in the other photo, and free coffee and cake were served by girls handpicked by the discerning Sonny and attractively attired in typical Miami costume. The front of the house was decorated with flags and bunting. A stage show put on by the Shepherd Mickey Mousers was featured among the week's attractions. A Gift Night ended the festivities on Saturday.

Despite strong opposition, because of a "Get-Acquainted Week" put on by an invading theatre circuit, Sonny managed to ring up a nice gross for the week. Details other than outlined above are lacking, but it can be safely stated that he put over his usual aggressive campaign. Now that the season is in full swing down in his town we'll hope to hear more concerning his activities.

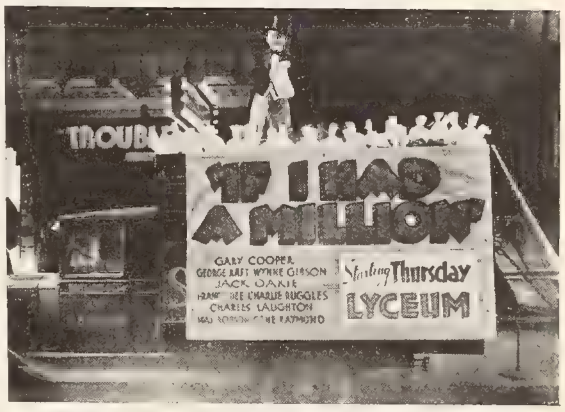
STUNTS AND OTHER EFFORTS FEATURED IRWIN'S CAMPAIGN

A novel street stunt, a newspaper tie-up and special advertising featured effective advance work done on "If I Had a Million" by George Irwin and Earl Long, respectively manager and advertising director of the Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

The accompanying photo practically tells the story of the street stunt they used to such good effect. On the day prior to opening (day before Thanksgiving) when a great many people were shopping along the downtown section, it was arranged to drive a flat truck loaded with 100 money bags full of fake money through the section. The truck was bannered with copy on the picture and standing among the money bags a young man tossed out pennies at intervals. A crowd of keenly interested youngsters naturally followed in the wake of the truck but the pennies were thrown out only a few at a time and $10 worth more than filled the entire bill.



Free display ads were obtained by tying up with a newspaper on a "shopping tour" through a stated day's advertisements. Copy in the forepart of the ad read: "If You Had a Million—How Much Money—Could You Spend in—A Shopping Tour—Of Today's Ads." Readers were then instructed to grab a pencil, jot down names, prices and advertisers of the costliest items, total the amount and send same to the newspaper department. Guest tickets were given to those sending in authentic, highest totals.

Wide distribution in stores, office buildings, etc., was given a quantity of envelopes inscribed: "This Envelope Contains a Certified Check for One Million Dollars." The contents consisted of what appears to be regular accessory check and letter from donor to beneficiary. These envelopes were also distributed by the man on truck, whenever his vehicle got stuck in traffic.

Irwin and Long's advance campaign was particularly effective in building up trade which the management considered on par with any heretofore enjoyed at the Lyceum, so we're passing along this account with the hope that it will prove of benefit to other members of this organization. We'll be awaiting further news from both these energetic showmen of Duluth.

BOY OPERATORS OF OWL THEATRE HELD A FLASHY PREMIERE

It's been some little time since we've reported the activities of Messrs. Hefferan, Folger, Blietz and Hartger, co-operators of the unique Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., but a recent communication advises us that the boys are still carrying on with their profitable theatre enterprise in the 60-seat garage building located in a neighborhood section of the city.

Their latest, and, incidentally, quite widely publicized event, was the Michigan premiere of the French film "A Nous la Liberte," which filled a four day engagement to the tune of previews and a regular Premiere Opening, with radio broadcast, introduction of patrons by "mike" and all the other Hollywood trimmings.

It was a big event for the four youthful impresarios, despite the fact that their school work suffered accordingly, and they're passing this French film premiere idea along for some other Round Tabler to try out should they see fit to do so. The very novelty of the stunt is enough to assure it a generous amount of radio and newspaper publicity.

BILL WHYTE PULLED GOOD STUNT BEFORE LEAVING RIVERHEAD

Returns relating to activities between theatres managers and local football squads during the '32 season are still coming in, this time from W. H. Whyte, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, Long Island, N. Y., and now in charge of the Rye Theatre, N. Y.

Like several other Club members, Whyte contacted the coach of the local eleven and arranged for a big turn-out for the showing of a football theme picture. It happened that a star player on a college eleven—a product of Riverhead—was home for the holidays and Whyte prevailed upon him to be present on the occasion. His name was put up on the marquee lights. Affairs were turned over to the cheer leader, who introduced the coach and players in turn. Local pride in the good showing the team made during the past season put the night over in a big way. All it cost Whyte were passes to the team, four cheer leaders, the coach and the star player.

The next time fellow Club members hear from Bill Whyte it will be from points north and west of his old stamping ground, a place he has honorably filled for a long time. With his passing from Riverhead and Peconic Bay these points will need to be covered by his successor, whom, we understand, is Charlie Maxwell, and hope he will do as well by the Club as Whyte has done since he became a Round Tabler.

Selette's Farewell!

When Eddie Selette, former manager of the Strand Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., resigned, that post to go with Morse and Rothenberg, his former associates, as field manager, North End merchants and employees of the Strand tendered him a party following his last day in charge of the theatre. The party was in the nature of a surprise and the occasion of presenting Selette with several gifts. All his friends wish him success in his new venture.

BUILDING BUSINESS WITH FLASHY DISPLAYS!

The first one, on "Smilin' Through," was originally used at the Olympia and then transferred to the Paramount. The second shows an inside display on the same picture, made by McKoy and his assistant, Francis Falkenberg for the first run showing at the Olympia. Note the attractive cutout, flowers and other props that carried out the "gate scene" of the picture. The third photo in the strip shows another front built for the Olympia by McKoy and Falkenberg, featured by large, cutout title letters and false front. Large burgees hung from either side of the marquee.

We also note that most attractive outside and inside displays were turned out when "Bring 'Em Back" played the Olympia. Cutout letters and animal figures from 24's set off the jungle-like entrance and the jungle atmosphere was further carried out in the foyer with a profusion of palm leaves, other foliage and stuffed specimens of wild animals.

Examples of work done by City Manager McKoy and his Miami staff have appeared from time to time in this department and it's always interesting to get a line on what they're doing. Now that the season down in his town is in full swing, we'll expect a lot more news of showbusiness as it's conducted in this popular winter resort.

HOW TO NAIL PROFITABLE RADIO TIE-UPS TO THE BOX OFFICE

Broadcasting: A Valuable Ad Medium When Worked Along Proper Lines and Designed to Bring Real Box Office Results!

Complete Details for Best Use of Radio Contained in This Article from a Man Whose Experience Should Aid You!

by IRA GLUCKSMAN

GOT a radio station in or around your town?

If so, your attractions and theatre ought to be getting regular air plugs at little or no cost.

A little ingenuity, some legwork and a pinch of salesmanship will do the trick.

Merely getting on the air, however, means nothing. As in all exploitation or advertising, it's the way the stunt is worked that determines whether it will bring the populace around to the box-office.

To be worthwhile, a tie-up of any kind must sell enough tickets to show a profit on the effort or money expended in putting it across. Radio tie-ups are no exception.

Here are some ideas based on experience of various showmen in the past:

General Suggestions

1. Some radio tie-ups are made only on specific pictures and so last only a few days, two weeks at most. Others are so arranged that they will continue indefinitely. Obviously, the second kind are far superior.

2. The local newspaper is still the theatre's best publicity bet. Don't engage in a radio tie-up if it will arouse antagonism of the press.

Radio stations and newspapers are rivals for advertising. If the proposed radio tie-up will take advertising revenues away from the paper, that means war. Change the tie-up so that this will not happen, or forget about it.

On the other hand, the newspaper will smile on a tie-up if benefitted by extra advertising or subscriptions. In fact, in this case the paper will come through with plenty of extra publicity.

3. Make sure that everybody engaged in the tie-up benefits from it. If a merchant goes into a tie-up and pays for radio time, the arrangement should definitely help his business.

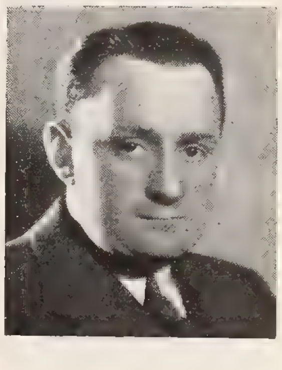
This is common sense. Should the merchant find that the theatre alone benefits, he is through with all theatre tie-ups for the future. But if the tie-up is a whale of a success in increasing his business as well as the theatre's he will jump at future tie-ups, radio or otherwise.

4. Before promising to use talent from the theatre, make sure that the talent will be available without special costs and that there will be no conflict with union rules, etc.

5. Make friends around the studio in the same manner as in the editorial rooms of the newspaper. It pays!

6. Plan the program as carefully as you would your own show. A halting, unentertaining program on the air is as bad, if not worse, than a poor program in the theatre. It takes only a turn of the dial for your radio audience to leave you.

This is another example of the effort we are constantly making to bring to the readers of the Club pages the ideas and suggestions of men particularly well qualified to write upon subjects of interest to showmen in general.



As his first contribution in a series of special manuals, Ira Glucksman has selected "Radio" as offering many untouched possibilities. Those who are quick to grasp a good suggestion will undoubtedly try their best to work out something for their theatres along the lines laid down by Mr. Glucksman and they will encounter little or no difficulty in so doing if they digest what he has to say and be guided accordingly.

Mr. Glucksman, for the past six years, has spent practically all of his time in fields that made him outstanding in writing these manuals. He has had unlimited experience in several important fields such as trade paper editing, publicity work, etc., and for the past two years has specialized in this type of work on the staff of Publix Opinion. While on this circuit house organ he wrote many original manuals dealing with theatre promotion and merchandising.

We are unusually pleased that we are afforded the opportunity of presenting this valuable series and expect that his manuals will be greeted with open arms by every live-wire showman who wants to keep his theatre operating profitably via sensible, well-thought-out ideas.

Time is an important consideration on the air. Rehearse every planned program, preferably with a stop-watch to make sure that it stays within the number of allotted broadcast minutes.

7. Analyze a station's "circulation" much as you would a newspaper's. How many people are reached and when are they reached? What kind of people are reached?

In general, preferred hours of the day are between 11 a. m. and 1 p. m.; 6 p. m. and midnight.

Saturday is the least preferred day of the day, because people go out most on that day. During mild weather, Sundays fall into the Saturday class.

For the same reason, radio listeners decrease greatly between the middle of May and the middle of September. The lowest point is reached in July and August, when the heat draws people out of their homes.

In your particular community, there may be certain programs on other stations preferred above anything else offered. Try to get a time when the number of local listeners to your station is at its peak.

Another point demanding attention is the type of listeners reached—men, women, children, high school youngsters, etc. For the theatre, the best hours will be the family hours, when everybody is home and listening—at supper hour, for example. Accordingly, when going after a merchant to pay for the radio time in a tie-up, try to get one who is as much interested in reaching the entire family as you are.

8. In some cases theatres have made direct tie-ups with radio stations, the theatre paying nothing except to supply entertainment. In other instances the theatre has supplied the program for a local merchant who pays the station the time charges. In still other instances theatres have bought time outright.

There are mighty few instances where leg work and ingenuity won't earn no cost radio time for the theatre.

9. When using amateur talent or other talent inexperienced in the studio, impress upon them that no side remarks or unnecessary sounds are to be made during the broadcast. The microphone is sensitive and will pick up every sound.

10. There have been instances where managers got so interested in the novelty of staging radio programs, they very nearly forgot their own programs. The object of a radio tie-up is to stimulate sale of tickets. But if the tie-up requires so much time that the theatre has to be neglected, the very reason for putting it on is defeated.

Program Building

Just as a newspaper or magazine must publish material to interest readers, so must a radio program include entertainment to draw listeners. Bore these listeners, and they flick the dial and tune you out.

Obviously, it is impossible to suggest a formula for specific programs guaranteed to keep the radio audience interested in any given community at all times. But it is possible to present some workable stunts to be incorporated. As examples, here are a few that have been tried by exhibitors with marked success.

(A) Chatter Column

The radio chatter column not only interests most listeners, but also proves great stuff to build up coming attractions and players.

It consists of five to fifteen minutes of movie chatter, sometimes interspersed with notes of local interest. The items should each be brief and delivered in any easy, chatty flow.

Fan material can easily be gathered from producers' announcements, press books, trade papers, and the like.

A good idea is to tie-in a local paper to reproduce this column the day after it is delivered on the air. This can be done with greatest ease if the chatter is concluded with a series of fan questions, such as: Who will play the leading part in such and such a picture? To whom is Helen Twelvetrees married? When is Clark Gable's birthday? Then ask listeners to look for answers in the paper the next day.

NAILING RADIO TIE-UPS!

(B) Air Trailers

A great plug for your coming attractions and at the same time an interesting few minutes for listeners is the Air Trailer.

This consists of getting local talent to play the parts of the various characters in one or two sequences from a coming feature. If you plan this sufficiently in advance, you should have little trouble obtaining desired parts of the script through your exchange or direct from the producer.

Talent can be obtained by tying up with a local dramatics school or high school dramatics club, or from among acquaintances in the community. It shouldn't be hard to get someone with talent to be a Richard Arlen for a radio performance or somebody else to be a Joan Crawford.

A stunt like this is sure-fire to get the entire countryside listening in, especially relatives and friends of the performers.

(C) Organ

A broadcast of selections played by the theatre organist has been successfully used in exchange for radio plugs in tie-ups direct with local stations.

Some theatres which have silent organs have even arranged for the station to provide an organist especially for the broadcasts.

The stunt has possibilities for a community sing with the singing of the audience broadcast as well.

(D) Stage Broadcast

If you run stage shows, even amateur affairs, get part of the program broadcast direct from the stage.

The audience can be pepped up by the announcement that they will see a broadcast right from the stage of the theatre.

The listeners will be attracted to the show by hearing part of it.

(E) Air Games

There are all kinds of games that can be played over the air. Some can be adapted from old newspaper tie-up ideas.

The reason for including these games in the program, of course, is to attract extra listeners.

Here are a few of these games that might be used. Others can be modeled along the same lines:

1. Award a pair of guest tickets to the ten persons whose names, auto license numbers or telephone numbers are announced during the broadcast, provided these persons call the station by phone within two hours after the announcement.

Such names, auto license numbers or telephone numbers can be selected at random from local mailing lists, telephone directories, newspaper subscribers' lists, etc.

It is important that each one used be carefully checked so that names or numbers of dead persons or persons who have moved away are not included. The community mightn't think it funny for a dead man to be asked to telephone the station for a pair of guest tickets to see a picture with some such title as "Road to Heaven" or "Hell's Angels."

2. Devise and announce password. Admit without charge the first ten persons coming to the next day's matinee and giving this password to the doorman.

To avoid any charge of unfairness after the ten have been admitted, announce further that the password must be written on a slip of paper together with the name and address of the person giving it. These slips can be shown to anybody not believing that ten persons arrived with the password ahead of him.

3. Both of the above ideas are distinct plugs for the theatre. To give a participating merchant a "break" a game similar to the word or letter mistake can be devised. Get the merchant to award souvenirs to the first ten persons telephoning the station about a purposely made mistake in an announcement plugging his merchandise.

Arranging the Tie-Up

Before stations or air advertisers will participate in a radio tie-up, they must be sold on the idea. Therefore, it behooves the manager to put the deal before them only when he can come around with a well worked out plan. They must be convinced that they will benefit.

Sell them on such points as the attention value of anything connected with moving pictures, the entertainment value of the program that a professional showman can devise, the glamour of anything connected with the theatre.

Show them a draft of the first proposed broadcast, and point out a few possibilities for future broadcasts.

Then, to obtain full benefit from the tie-up, to get the community interested and to ring in the newspaper, sell the idea of the participating merchant using newspaper ads and heralds to announce the arrangement.

The station, of course, should make frequent announcements about the tie-up and the theatre ought to contribute a trailer or at least lobby announcements. A panel announcing time of the broadcasts should be inserted in the theatre's regular ads. It is to the interest of all engaged in the tie-up to get the community steamed up about it.

Because the tie-up must definitely be nailed to the box-office, if it is to be of any use, provision should be made in the agreement for frequent announcement of theatre name, programs and playdates in all of the merchant's broadcasts and newspaper ads.

When the tie-up is under way, keep a weather eye out for fan mail. If there's lots of it, the stunt is successful. It means that many people are listening in. If this fan mail drops off, that's the signal either to drop out or to devise different programs that will interest the listeners.

Kid Angle

A number of exhibitors have had marked success with radio tie-ups designed to get the kids and interest the parents. Here is a typical one:

A department store in a southern town was induced by the local exhibitor to devote radio time to plugging the theatre's kid club. The club grew until it had about 1,000 delighted youngsters turning out every Saturday morning. These kids were given promoted candy or ice cream at each meeting, and presents on their birthdays. Birthday dates were obtained from the file of membership applications.

The store engaged a woman to tell a bedtime story over the air every evening and to make announcements about the club meetings. This woman also congratulated kids over the air on their birthdays and assisted the manager to stage kid contests at the Saturday morning meetings, which were broadcast for the benefit of the parents.

The stunt has been so successful that when other merchants in town requested that they be let in on the thing the original store refused to share expenses or co-sponsorship with any other establishment.

LIEBERMAN LINED 'EM UP BUT DIDN'T TELL US ABOUT HIS STUNT

We have a photo here which shows that in spite of adverse conditions, F. E. Lieberman, in charge of the Capitol, Victory and Rialto Theatres in Lowell, Mass., succeeded in coaxing out enough local film fans to form a line-up that stretched clear across the next block. Okay for that—but Lieberman fails to advise just what bait he used so all we can do is publish the photo to support his claim and let it go at that. Maybe he'll tell us next time.

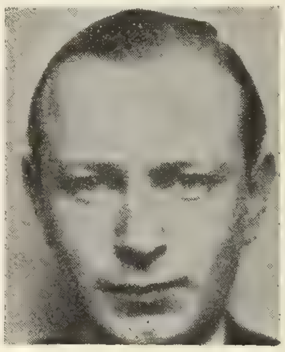
Lieberman is a new contributor to Club pages and with three theatres to look after should be in a position to send along much interesting information. We will look forward to future communications.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Born in St. Petersburg, Russia, in the year 1913, Paul Rosenblum began his career in show business at the age of 18, or about 18 months ago, with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer theatre interests in Brussels, Belgium, where he took care of publicity for four theatres aggregating approximately 5,500 seats. Two of the houses were located in Brussels, one in Liege and the other in Ghent.



After spending 12 months in Belgium, during which time he conducted a number of outstanding publicity campaigns for his company, he was transferred to his concern's head office in Paris, where he is at present located. He recently returned from a several weeks trip to various European cities in the interest of special work.

Rosenblum received his education in schools in Berlin and Paris, and for a man of his age is well up the ladder of success in showbusiness. He entered this game, he tells us, because he likes theatres and everything that goes with them and has no intention at the present time of ever leaving this field for another.

THIS WEEK'S AD GROUP WERE SELECTED FROM A BATCH OF ADS MADE UP BY L.J. WEGENER, MANAGER OF THE CAPITOL THEATRE IN CLINTON, IOWA. ONE OF THE A.H. BLANK THEATRES. WEGENER LAYS GREAT STRESS ON THE BORDER ARRANGEMENT AS WELL AS THE CAREFUL USE OF EXCHANGE MATS IN THE GENERAL LAYOUT OF ALL HIS ADS. WHITE SPACE WAS NOT SACRIFICED AT ANY TIME, YET HE DEVOTED GENEROUS SPACE FOR SELLING COPY.

L. LAMM ENGINEERED GIGANTIC MERCHANT TIE-UP ON AN AUTO

Returns on holiday activities include the fine merchant tie-up made by Louis Lamm, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, between his house, a local dealer in a popular priced auto and no less than 43 merchants for give-away on Xmas Eve of a new model car.

The plan worked through the merchants by way of sales of merchandise and each store displayed a sign in windows covering the tie-up. The give-away of the car, which was put on display in the lobby of the theatre ten days in advance, took place from the stage.

The auto dealer collected enough from the merchants to cover cost of the car, plus all expense involved in printing and distribution of some 200,000 special tickets. It was not specified that the eventual owner of the car be on hand at night of give-away. A corking co-op ad, decorated with a large cut of Santa, was promoted for the occasion.

Lamm's tie-up proved to be a corking tonic for the drooping pre-Xmas box office—particularly for Xmas Eve—which is looked upon by many as the worst trade night of the whole year. The three-cornered deal turned out to be a profitable one for all concerned and to all appearances will be repeated at a future date.

This is one for your tickler file, boys. Just put it where you will be able to find it before next Christmas rolls around and it may prove mighty useful to you in your plans for holiday activities.

ADVERTISE FEATURE STARTING TIME!

There is a decided tendency on the part of the patrons of theatres to try and avoid walking in on the middle of a feature. Some get the impression that each day's feature starting time remains the same. They are not expected to understand about difference in footage, extra shorts, special trailers and sometimes a complete reversal of your schedule due to an extraordinarily long feature.

Stressing the starting time of your feature, particularly the last feature at night, will be welcomed in almost every theatre. It encourages patrons to make the last show, where they might have passed it up thinking they were too late. It also gives them a chance to arrive at the theatre sometime just prior to the start or after the finish of the main attraction.

It means handling more paid admissions, because you get them at the breaks and avoid making them stand up in the back of the theatre or in the lobby. This, too, is a tough slant and will be eased up considerably where the rush occurs before the feature goes on.

Feature starting times should be noted conspicuously in your newspaper ads, on your programs and most certainly in front of the theatre or the box office.

PETE EGAN ACTIVE AS EVER IN CIVIC AFFAIRS IN CALGARY

In line with his usual policy of actively participating in all civic affairs of Calgary, Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre there, recently arranged a midnight show for sole benefit of the juvenile sporting fraternity. He chose a special sporting feature for the occasion.

This is not by any means the first time Pete has figured in sports circles of his town; in fact, one of the many side titles he holds is vice-president of the Midget Hockey League. This office and many other civic activities is one of the reasons why Eagan and the Palace are constantly before the public—a condition which does not hurt the box office one iota.

BRINKMEYER AND HIS ST. LOUIS AMUSEMENT CO. HELPED THE POOR

Holiday activities among the eighteen theatres operated in St. Louis by the St. Louis Amusement Company, according to J. F. Brinkmeyer, president, included the staging of a number of food matinees and establishment of toy collecting depots in theatre lobbies.

The first food matinees held accounted for enough provender to take care of between 300 and 400 families and subsequent shows yielded most satisfactory returns. Two passes to the theatre in question were placed in each basket of food. The entire theatre personnel, including union employees, donated their services.

All toys, old or new, collected by the various theatres, were turned over to St. Louis firemen to repair for the free toy shop conducted by the Board of Religious Organizations. The local fire chief lent his presence to these activities and wives of the firemen were on hand to assist with collection and distribution. Everybody entered into the spirit of the idea, which accounts for the way it turned out.

Along with much other worthy work done along these lines by members of the Round Table Club, Mr. Brinkmeyer and his associates are to be congratulated for the part they played. We will look forward to hearing further word of what he and his several managers are doing in showbusiness.

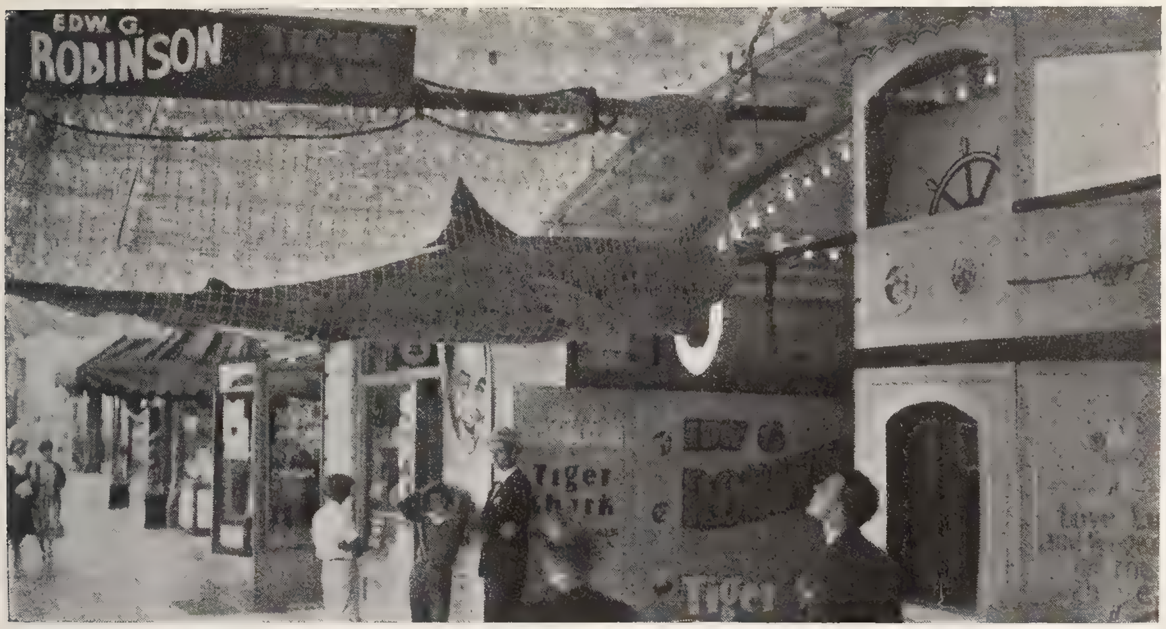
CHALMERS - COLLINS SECURED MUCH FREE SPACE IN NEWSPAPER

Over 3,000 lines of free space, to say nothing of three front-page boxes, was secured by Jack Chalmers and Ed Collins, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Houston, Texas, as the result of a tie-up they made with the newspaper for the running of a classified ad page gag which entitled readers to guest tickets to the theatre.

The boxes and large display ads, half of the latter devoted to the coming show, plugged the tie-up three days in advance. The big display ads ran on the amusement page and made others look tame in comparison. The gag, itself, was the usual one with offer of tickets to all who inserted seven-time classified ads in the paper on the chosen day.

The above was a fine scoop for Chalmers and Collins and without a doubt focussed attention on the Paramount that week. We are mighty glad to include word of their activities in this department and hope they'll find time to send along further information. What say, Jack and Ed?

REALISTIC ATMOSPHERE BY WAUGH!



Whether Memphis, Tenn., is shark-minded or not the good citizens got a close-up of the sea-devils, even though stuffed, when Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre exploited "Tiger Shark."

Colonel Waugh did himself proud when he fixed up his front and lobby—all painted in battleship gray, with a pilot's house rigged above the cashier's booth. A regulation ship's wheel moved back and forth, as if guided by the pitch and roll of a ship, and a machine was hooked up to provide a grinding sound. The accompanying photo shows the front, pilot house and shark suspended in a fish net from marquee roof. Other deep sea fish were displayed in the inner body. Life preservers and cutout heads of Robinson adorned the entrance.

Additional effort included the red-imprinting of 2,000 copies of a radio weekly for downtown distribution, regular run of advertising, art and stories and generous mention in reviews and on amusement pages of local newspapers. Cards were placed on city street cars, advising people to ride to see "Tiger Shark" and local taxi companies were tied up for bumper cards. The picture was further exploited through distribution of packages of matches, with copy reading, "It's Matchless—Tiger Shark—with Edward G. Robinson," etc.

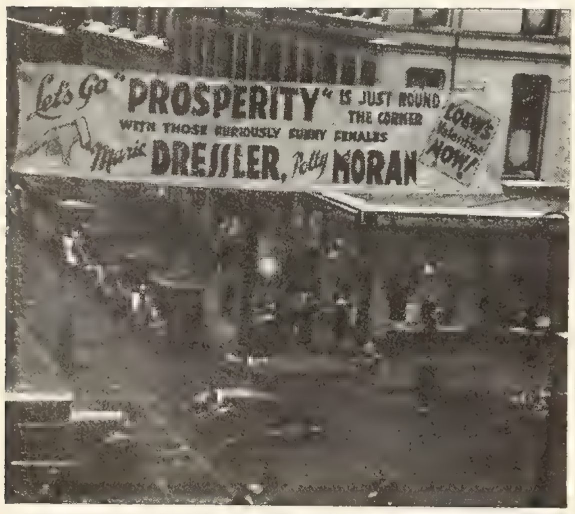
Howard certainly went in strongly for marine effect, and did a mighty neat job. All he lacked was a dish of tunafish salad and some sardine sandwiches. Best regards to you and your gang, Colonel.

WALLY CALDWELL PUT OVER GOOD CAMPAIGN FOR DRESSLER - MORAN

We note that Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, displayed his usual adeptness in the matter of securing permission from city authorities for the placing of a 28 by 5 foot "Prosperity" banner over the principal street intersection in the city. The accompanying photo bears out our statement.

Additional exploitation on the picture included sticking of "Prosperity Stickers" on windows of 300 taxicabs and other autos; stuffing of "Prosperity Bonds" in packages handed out and delivered by a number of stores; distribution of "Bonds" and "Stickers" by girls wearing slickers covered with Stickers; Bonds and Stickers attached to garments delivered from 62 branches of a dry cleaning company; tie-ups with merchants for 32 downtown windows; tie-up with Postal for display of messenger boy posters in important downtown windows; Prosperity streamers on windows; special three-sheet poster art sign in lobby two weeks in advance and currently in empty store; distribution of bonds and stickers in parking areas and garages; and an aggressive newspaper advertising campaign that yielded a considerble amount of gratis art and stories, both local and out-of-town.

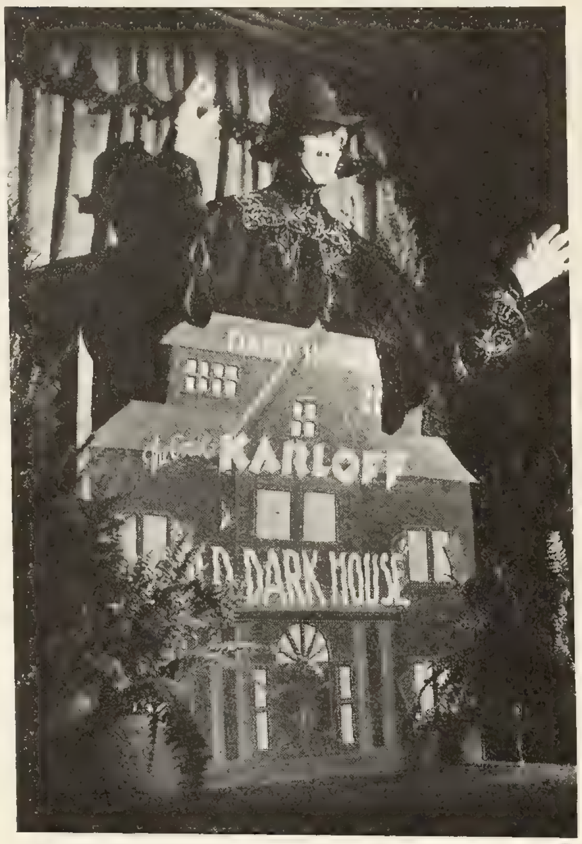
A unique little gag which we propose to set apart from the above produced a number of excellent publicity stories and a vast amount of word-of-mouth advertising. Caldwell circulated what he called a "Prosperity Dollar," identified by a cellophane-protected rectangle of light, durable fabric. Anyone receiving this dollar was asked to immediately place it back in circulation again and for so doing obtain free a guest ticket to the show. A tie-up was made with a local newspaper to follow the progress of the bill and award the guest tickets. In two days the dollar figured in 16 sales and in 13 downtown stores and accounted for $11.17 worth of merchandise. Readers will recall that one of the so-called "white rabbits," introduced at the National Capitol as a means of solving the depression, was based upon the somewhat similar scheme of placing in circulation amounts of fiat money to be stamped with a Government stamp each time it changed hands and, finally, to be redeemed at face value. While particularly adapted to "Prosperity," it would appear that this gag might be used with other pictures. As far as we know it's original in this form.



Let's Go "PROSPERITY" Is Just Round the Corner
With Those Curiously Funny Females
Marie DRESSLER, Polly MORAN
Loew's Valentine NOW!

As usual, we can chalk up a thorough and effective campaign for Wally Caldwell.

Chas. Keyser's Striking Lobby Display Captured Plenty of Attention!



The striking and effective lobby display pictured above was engineered by Charlie Keyser, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, and used as advance exploitation on "Dark House."

No cost was involved aside from painting of the house set piece. The life-size dummy was promoted from a local department store, with a few added pieces of clothing and face made over with putty.

Send Us More!

We agree with Keyser that this unique, grotesque display must have captured attention from patrons when they entered the lobby and we're sure that other Round Tablers will be likewise impressed. This is Keyser's first contribution to the Club and we'll hope to receive many other communications from this energetic showman. He has been associated with Publix and the Warner Brothers for the past eleven years and knows his way 'round. We're glad to welcome him as a new member.

JAMES CHERRY PUT OVER STUNT DURING BIG FOOTBALL GAME

Effective publicity was secured down in Dallas, Texas, on "Smilin' Through" when James Cherry, manager of the Palace Theatre, arranged for a parade between halves of the recent football game between two prominent universities. The paraders carried a large banner bearing the title of the picture in large letters.

Other efforts included tie-ups with a number of shops on the college campus; radio announcements advance and currently, and another tie-up with an exclusive hotel to carry sales copy concerning picture on menus. A life-size reproduction of Norma Shearer wearing a real period gown was used in the hotel lobby.

Okay, James, we'd like to have some more accounts of your interesting activities, so keep us posted!

WALTER MORRIS WAGED A GOOD CAMPAIGN ON CHAIN GANG PICTURE

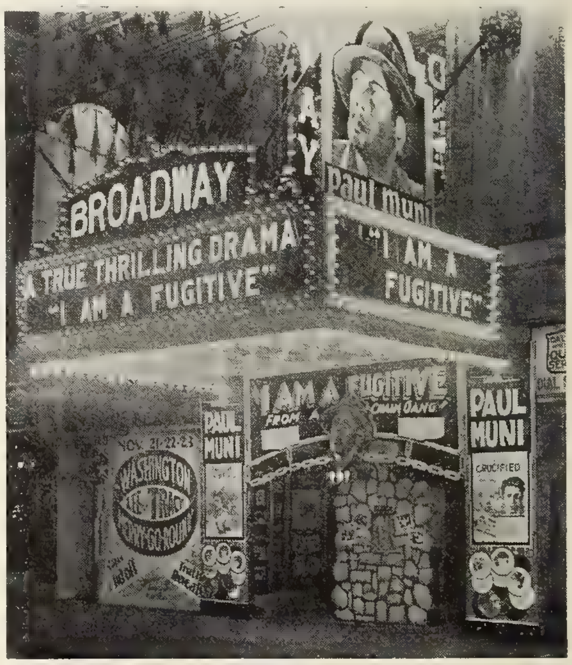
The excellent and aggressive work being done by managers below the Mason-Dixon Line on "I Am a Fugitive" is further brought to light in the campaign made by Walter Morris, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.; particularly commendable are these instances when the delicacy of presenting a picture with such a theme in a section on record as sponsoring convict labor is taken into consideration.

Morris started his work with a series of four trailers, advance, special and regular sound. Ushers and doormen were garbed in convict clothing and hand painted cutouts, nine feet high, were placed in the lobby in advance and currently in vacant store windows.

A letter was sent to the American Legion headquarters in the city, touching on the ex-veteran angle of the picture and urging that every member see the show. It happened that the picture played at election time and 20 newsboys distributed handbills on returns, at the same time making distribution of 2,000 heralds on the picture. A tie-up was made with a prominent gown shoppe for a window on "Glenda Farrell Gowns."

Bill posting included twenty-six 24's; twenty-one 6's; one hundred and twenty-nine 3's and fifty window cards, all in choice locations in the city and a nearby town drawn upon by the theatre. Newspaper advertising was sensationally presented, and in addition to a classified gag whereby guest tickets were given for inserting ads, this phase of the campaign yielded many inches of free story and art space.

Another stunt that lent to the presentation of the pictures was the use of a phonograph record, locally made, before each showing, outlining the present-day predicament of the author of the story. Usher cards, bearing the personal endorsement of "your usher," were distributed in advance. Street cars and taxis were utilized for cards and tire covers in the advance campaign.



The accompanying photo shows the chain and stone effect fashioned for the front and cashier's booth.

Morris is doing good work down in Charlotte, according to reports, and the above campaign is typical of his aggressive efforts.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 156.—(A) Dale Danielson asks why 25-cycle flicker is more noticeable than are two-wing shutter blade interruptions at normal projection speed. You are invited to set forth your views. (B) Tell us just what a watt represents and why it represents it. (C) In connection with Section A of this question, tell us just why rapidity of light interruptions has an effect on flicker. (Look out! This has to do with the human eye.)

Answer to Question No. 150

Question No. 150 was: "(A) Explain just how two and three-phase current is produced. (B) How is two-phase usually transmitted? Three-phase? In this we refer to the wiring. (C) Should you attach a wire circuit half a mile long to a one-volt battery, the wires completely insulated from earth and from each other would they show one-volt pressure at any point in their length? (D) Suppose you connect the positive of one battery or dynamo to the negative of a second one of similar characteristics, what would such a connection be called and what would be its effect? Suppose you connect the two negatives and the two positives together and connect the combination to a circuit, what is the combination called and what would be its effect?

We have the correct answers in hand from the following: T. Van Vaulkenburg, Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth, Dale Danielson, C. Ray and T. Taylor, M. Simms and O. L. Daris, Bill Doe, D. L. Sinklow, D. Singleton and J. B. Buckley, S. D. Love and W. Love, M. H. Lonberger, G. Tinlin, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, M. D. Oleson and J. B. Malley, D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger, H. D. Schofield, L. Hutch and D. Goldberg, J. Cermak, R. D. Konley and S. Maybe, R. Singleton and M. L. George, G. Farmann, L. G. Gregeson and J. Hendershot, D. Anderson, P. L. Danby, J. Williams, T. McGruder, H. B. Coates, P. K. Daniels and P. L. Day, L. D. Simmons, T. M. Vinson and D. K. Ormie, R. S. Allen and T. N. Williams, D. V. Peterson, H. Edwards, B. Jones, O. L. Evans, E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner, D. L. Kurts and S. Howard, A. Bailey, N. McGuire, T. Davis and D. Lambert, J. Hendershot, H. Rogers, D. J. Purder, O. Allbright, D. R. Peters and D. Holler, D. L. Blinkendorfer, D. Little and J. H. Rathburn, E. Harlor and G. Harrison, H. Pilson and D. L. Danielson, P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks, T. Davis and T. Lambert, G. K. Berger and H. R. Baldwin, L. M. Richards, B. L. Banning and L. Jones, R. L. Mitchel, D. Michelson, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, F. F. Franks, D. D. Davis and L. Thomas, J. L. Hanson and F. Hranson, M. R. Davis, R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing, L. Grant and R. Geddings, B. Sappert, D. Emmerson, A. Breaston and D. Haber, R. Wheeler and R. Suler, P. Jackson and B. Diglah, P. R. Fox, B. L. and H. D. Palmer, D. U. Granger, M. Henderson and L. B. Rubin and M. B. Greig.

We will listen to Messrs. Evans and Rau on Section A. They say, "Two and three-phase currents are usually generated on specially wound two-phase and three-phase alternators. The two-phase alternator has two independent windings displaced along the armature by an angle corresponding to one-quarter of a cycle, while the three-phase alternator has three equal windings on the armature, spaced equi-distant apart."

(B) G. E. Doe says, "The usual and best method for two-phase transmission is by means of two separate circuits. It may be done by using three wires, the central one employed for the return of both currents, or 'phases.' This latter method is not usually favored as it increases the chances for trouble through shorts and grounds sufficiently, in the opinion of most users and electricians, to more than counterbalance the saving in wire and installation labor."

(C) Hutch and Goldberg say, "Assuming the wires to be of ordinary commercial copper, there would be a theoretical drop, but if nothing were attached to them except the voltmeter, which as we all know consumes almost no current, we doubt if there would be any drop which could be measured by any except a more delicate instrument. In other words, while there would be a theoretical and an actual drop in voltage, it would not show on any ordinary voltmeter, hence for practical purposes we would hold no drop to appear."

I am not quite certain, but I believe this reply to be correct. Since the entire length of wire would certainly be charged with full voltage, and the instrument would not use sufficient current to set up appreciable resistance, I am unable to see where there could possibly be any appreciable drop under the conditions set forth. I have been unable to find any data covering this point. Will some of our electrical experts be good enough to give us the scientifically correct dope on this item?

(D) Lester Borst says, "Connecting two batteries or dynamos as described, the effect would be a 'series connection.' The voltage would be doubled at the outer terminals or wires connected thereto. It would be half that amount between either outer wire and the wire connected to the inner terminals. The second connection named would be what is known as a 'multiple connection.' Its effect would be to double the amperage, or in other words, to add the amperage output of the two power sources thus connected. The voltage would not be altered but would be that of either power source separately."

While the answers hover around a thousand a week, and I find them something more than ample work, or would but for the fact that so many of them can be discarded with only a sketchy examination, still there should be at least 10,000 instead of one. Frankly I don't quite know what I would do if there were, but I'd manage somehow, for I know the "school" is doing lots of good. Many projectionists read the questions each week and wait for the answers, but that is not the way to get the greatest amount of good out of such a thing. As I have said, making a real effort to dig up correct answers serves to fix the matter in your mind. Come on in! The water may be rough, but it's fine nevertheless.

Dr. Mees' New Device To Film In Dark With Infra-Red Ray

Members of the Science Forum of the New York Electrical Society last week heard a description of a device, developed by Dr. C. E. K. Mees, director of the research laboratories of Eastman Kodak, for the taking of photographs in absolute darkness by means of "invisible light" generated by the heat waves of ordinary electric flatirons attached to the regular house current.

The device is the latest development by Dr. Mees in the art of infra-red ray photography. The heat waves of the flat-iron contain infra-red rays, located just beyond the visible red light of the spectrum. A special photographic film, sensitive to infra-red, is all the equipment said to be necessary in addition to the hot flat-irons.

Largest Screen in Music Hall

The world's largest motion picture screen has been installed in the Radio City Music Hall, converted to a combined picture and vaudeville policy. The screen measures 70 by 40 feet and has a surface area of 2,800 square feet. The RKO Roxy screen is 60 by 30 feet.

Bell & Howell Has New Device

Bell and Howell, Chicago equipment manufacturer, has introduced a new Character Title Writer, for use with the company's Filmo cameras, in amateur picture-making. Animated titles are possible with the newly developed title writer.

William Rightmire Dies

William H. Rightmire, 76, actor, and said to be partly responsible for the beginning of Clara Bow's acting career, died last week in Long Beach Hospital, Long Island.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

OUR OWN TECHNOCRACY

"TECHNOCRACY," the pseudo-scientifico-political mania of the moment, born of one Mr. Howard Scott and abetted by a great university, has now about reached the point of deflation where Broadway might well produce a song under the suggested title of "Columbia, germ of the notion."

Our immediate provocation for thoughts about Technocracy this morning is in reflections on the intensely technical character of the motion picture, supremely a machine age product. It might confuse the Technocrats to realize that in this instance the Machine has created jobs by the thousands where there were no jobs before. There are, for instance, probably as many operators standing alongside projection machines even today as there were persons engaged in the whole art of the drama before the motion picture was born.

Meanwhile arises the curious observation that mostly everywhere else in the world of the Machine the evolutions of the era have tended toward lower unit prices for the product and wider distribution, but in the motion picture, born for a nickel, the machinery has been used in the opposite direction. The motion picture, striving for status, attainment, respectability, also glory, has increasingly and continuously imposed on itself the handicaps and limitations of the stage it supplants. For $500 one can today get a better motor car, for example, than could have been had for $10,000 in 1910. But how does the ratio stand for the screen?

It is just possible that certain obvious natural laws are at work under the current price revisions at the box office. It is opportune to repeat again our frequent assertion that the motion picture rose to dominance in the amusement world by force of being the world's best amusement buy—and to repeat again our continuous contention that it must be maintained in that position for its continued prosperity. The motion picture got strong, prosperous, important in an era when at no point in the traffic was anyone, from producer employing players, to distributor to exhibitor to audience, being charged "all the traffic will bear." Maybe the last dollars in the quota cost too much.

HONORING MR. BAUSCH

THE motion picture industry, which is quite as much optical as electrical, may well list among its friends Mr. Edward Bausch, who was honored last week by a testimonial dinner of the famed Society of the Genesee at the Commodore in New York. Mr. Louis Wiley of the New York Times, speaking of the attainments of the president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, observed that "he has improved the see in Genesee" but Mr. Wiley might have taken in the rest of the world including the motion picture camera and projector, too. In a speech by Dr. Arthur Louis Day, director of the Geophysical Laboratory, Carnegie Institution, Washington, D. C., for the first time was told the story of Mr. Bausch and his triumphs for America and the Allies in the making of optical glasses in the face of vast difficulties and well near tragic necessity.

THE status of Broadway and the show world of which it is the capital is not measurably enhanced by the marquee display on one of the street's most prominent locations, reading: "FOR MEN ONLY—ROAD TO HELL—Stage and Film—with living models—actual scenes show everything." A Broadway Association with the repute of a street and an industry at heart might do something about that. If the advertising is honest the show belongs on the Bowery, if anywhere, and, if it is not, it is worse.

BROADWAY, the press and the chatter of the industry is just now vastly agog with a lot of unnecessary excitement about impending mergers, receiverships, and all manner of projected and conjectured happenings of variously alleged and fancied spectacular nature. The real if not obvious fact is that the big things have all already happened. Wherever we go from here is up.

FOR so long we cannot remember when it started, advertisers have been insistent on position on right hand pages. Now comes a researcher, Mr. E. Ralph Schaefer, a graduate of Columbia's School of Business, to report that, in the ratio of about three to one, left hand pages get the first attention of readers. Mr. Schaefer used waiting rooms and trains as his laboratory and found that among 4,400 persons, 3,013 started to read on left hand pages, while only 1,387 turned to the right. Incidentally he found that a very large proportion started at the back of the publications. We may add another observation all our own—a good piece of copy will be seen anywhere.

DIAGNOSIS?

ABOUT a year ago Mr. Harry Bannister and Miss Ann Harding got a divorce so that her artistic career would not be permitted to overshadow his. Mr. Bannister appeared upset by the possibility that he would be known to the ages only as Miss Harding's husband. Now his "Late One Evening", after one week at the Plymouth, has folded, as they say in the patois of Broadway. Would it not be a tragedy if time should prove that matrimony was not the real trouble!

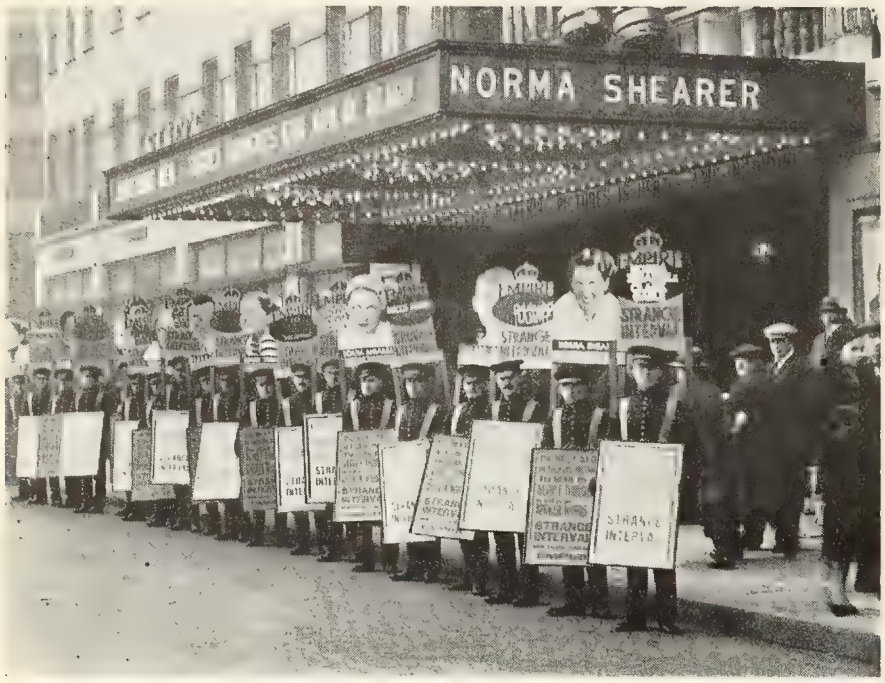
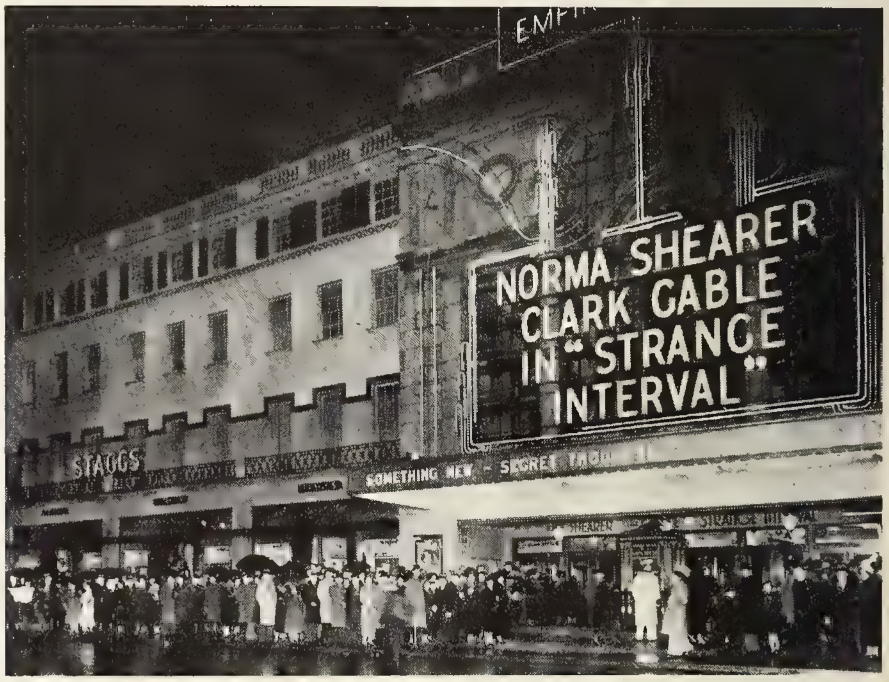
BOARDMEN, QUEUES AND LEICESTER SQUARE

they started out—



and brought back—



TERMINOLOGY may differ, but Leicester Square or Times Square the meaning is the same—showmanship. From historic Leicester Square of London, where Mr. Harry W. Crull holds forth at the Empire theatre, comes this word-picture of efficient application to the showman's job of drawing attention to the show.

"Boardmen" they call them in London; they're "sandwich men" on any city's Broadway in these United States. And "queues" are "lines". And "Strange Interval" is of course the showing title in England for "Strange Interlude". Now we may go on with the story.

Have you had fifteen sandwich men parading in Indian file downtown with the news of your next picture? Mr. Crull did, and the parade helped achieve an echoing march toward the box office. Perhaps there are ordinance restrictions, as Mr. Crull recalls from the days he was in the States—in Washington and Providence. But for cities where exhibitors are free to do so he says it's a "very effective method of exploitation. We used fifteen men, one following the other, in a constant procession in the West-end of London, and besides that used five men who remained on point, as it is called here, which in the States would probably be referred to as on permanent post. These locations were selected with a view to attracting the greatest number of people during the course of the day." . . . And the queue is the cue.

FLEXIBLE ADMISSION PRICES TAKE PLACE OF EXCLUSIVES AS PRACTICE

Product Will Be Sold to Public in New Season at Charges Based on Quality; Estimate Higher Receipts in Millions

Predict Arresting of Price Cutting, Correction of "Monopolistic" Phase of Exclusives and Readjusted Protection

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Flexible admission prices at motion picture theatres have definitely succeeded exclusive runs as a trade practice. The industry will begin in the new season to sell entertainment to the public at prices fluctuating comparably with the quality of the product. Concentrated effort will be made at once to change the hereditary system practiced by theatres of charging the same retail prices at the box-office for both good and improved merchandise. Expected benefits of flexible admissions include:

Stabilization of admissions which are now disorganized because of various movements to revise downward.

Termination of the widespread price-cutting movement.

Correction of so-called "monopolistic" phases of exclusive runs.

Amicable readjustment of protection "evils."

Halting "unfair competition" of 10-cent admissions to higher-scaled theatres showing identical product.

Apportioning of "dime pictures to dime houses."

End of legal and legislative attacks by exhibitors on exclusive runs.

Local education of patrons to appreciate quality.

Increased box-office receipts as a result of higher minimum admissions and extended playing time on selected "ace" pictures. Some estimate the increase would run between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually.

Exclusive runs virtually passed into history with the turn of the year. Theatre owners everywhere, and many distributors, too, had predicted the demise. There were no loud lamentations at the end and the mourners were few. Considerable undue alarm had been felt in some quarters and considerably too much enthusiasm existed in others.

Out of this experimentation has come a crystallization of policy which appears to many of the best minds of the industry to have considerably more merit and twice as much logic, governing, as it does, a more equitable dollar return for buyer and seller based on picture quality. Theatres at large may participate in the flexible admission plan and not merely a selected few, as exclusives stipulated. The unsuccessful trial of the exclusive plan forcefully proved again that the seller cannot make the important decisions of merchandising without taking into consideration the buying public and its representatives, the exhibitors.

Exclusive runs sought, in a manner which many declared to be bordering on the monopolistic, to correct the system of charging one retail price for both good and weak merchandise. The industry agreed that the condition is one which needs correcting, but even participants in the experiment declared as unsound the practice of showing pictures of a better quality only at one designated theatre in each community, at advanced admissions.

The new policy is a compromise with the exclusive plan on the amount of admission increase for selected quality features.

The principles of buying and booking and the method of protecting runs would remain the same basically, but bookings would be made with more care. Participants would be accorded more liberality in protection. Tension existing in many sections over protection schedules would, thereby, be lessened, according to the sponsors of flexibles.

Distribution authorities estimate that between 50 and 60 socalled "ace" pictures are released yearly and these would be made available. Obviously, everything depends on Hollywood.

Flexible admissions are not new. They were practiced widely ten years ago, or longer, and up to the era of the socalled "boom," when there was little need for bargain-hunting. Now that the nation's economic pendulum again moves toward the center on the return swing, and abnormal and subnormal conditions are giving way to more orderly operation, the industry is proceeding to adjust itself accordingly. Lowering of admissions is held to be unsound. In any event, flexible admissions appear to be a new and important factor in the readjustment. An executive of the MPPDA said this week that the industry would have been saved millions of dollars lost as a result of drastically reduced box-office scales, if flexibles had been adopted last spring.

Exclusive showings still are practiced in a few localities, although there have been no new deals in recent weeks. It is doubtful if existing agreements will be renewed.

Loew's, principal participants, lowered admissions considerably in Providence and Kansas City houses where exclusives had been installed, indicating that the policy did not hold up. In New England, where the circuit of Harry Arthur embraced exclusives, the plan will not be continued. "After experimenting with exclusive runs," Mr. Arthur said this week, "I believe that as a general policy they are unsound. Exclusive showings of outstanding pictures would undoubtedly result in tremendous box-office results, but exclusive showings of poor attractions are decidedly detrimental to the theatre."

Mr. Arthur's territory was considered ideal for the experiment. His reactions to the results of operating some five months under an exclusive policy indicate that the flexible admission plan is a more practical solution. Exclusives were somewhat of a "headache" to all concerned right from the start, what with rumblings of a Department of Justice investigation of the practice, threatened state legislative actions and impending boycotts by exhibitors. Vehement protestations from theatre owners, participated in by some distributors, hastened the end.

Some of the industry's best minds on distributor-exhibitor matters were in on the attack, including Sidney R. Kent, Carl Laemmle, M. A. Lightman, George Skouras, Jack Cohn, Abram F. Myers, E. W. Hammons, Samuel Goldwyn, Ed Fay, H. M. Richey, Fred Wehrenberg, and leaders of practically every state association of theatre owners.

There was, however, opinion that the situation needed correcting where theatres appeal to patrons who wait to see at 10 cents the same "quality" release which previous runs screened at higher prices. Flexible scales are supposed to be the solution.

Sponsors of flexibles believe that it is physically impossible for one theatre showing exclusives to draw even a representative percentage of possible picturegoers in a community, and, therefore, rental losses from non-participating theatres are enormous. Prospective patrons not attending the exclusive showing are lost forever, they say. The flexible idea is advanced not only as one which would prevent such losses, but its provision for increasing admissions on from 50 to 60 quality pictures would return to the industry additional sums without extra cost.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, is credited with the flexible admission plan in its present form. Mr. Kent said recently: "The 25-cent minimum idea of flexible prices, starting from first-run, is being tried out in the South and it worked well. Even with such a plan, most theatres could get at least 80 per cent of the total product. Ten-cent theatres should not be sold. Naturally, under the 25-cent minimum admission arrangement, the other runs would have to be raised, when such pictures are played, in proportion. When first tried, fewer pictures must be included in the category of specials, so the public would appreciate value." There would be plenty of average productions for theatres which choose to maintain lower admission prices, he said, and the lower bracket houses no longer would make unfair inroads on competitors forced to embrace a higher scale.

Distributors using the plan next season would not sell the selected pictures to houses not agreeing to flexible admissions and a 25-cent minimum.

Although some proponents of the flexible idea explain that its basic purpose is to effect an economic apportionment of quality in screen entertainment according to the public's willingness to pay for quality, no one mentioned the question of the public's ability to pay. This angle has a bearing on the current movement to revise downward in keeping with the times.

"If the public is shown a dime picture for a dime," said M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, "they will soon be willing to pay 25 cents for a 25-cent picture." Many believe that public confidence in quality films and in the motion picture theatre will be restored to its former high level by an honest adherence to the flexible plan.

Protection Would Be Revised

Protection and the price-cutting movement are directly involved in the flexible admission idea, general adoption of which would result in revision of protection schedules based on the new admission scales. Also, flexibles are expected to curtail the activities of hundreds of exhibitors who plan to join the 10-cent admission movement.

George Skouras, vice-president of Skouras Theatres, operating several hundred theatres for Fox, explained last week: 'The exclusive-run idea is comparable to the hyena which kills its young in order to fill its own 'belly' and, thereby, destroys the multiplication of its kind. The exclusive run will destroy the very thing that we need most today and that is, habitual patrons—'fans.'"

It was learned recently that renewed efforts were being made for elimination of the 10-cent price. Several companies were reported to be considering increasing the minimum admission stipulated in present contracts. Unaffiliated circuit interests, at that time, were said to have indicated unwillingness to increase 10-cent prices unless affiliated theatres and prior runs made proportionate increases.

Would Enforce Minimums

Distributors now are preparing also to force more rigid observance of increased minimums by exhibitors. Practically all distributors will take up the matter at their sales meetings in the spring. A 20-cent minimum is said to be favored by the majority of companies. Present minimums are 10 and 15 cents. It is proposed to increase these five cents. Few sales executives, however, would hazard a guess as to what the new contracts for 1933-34 might contain in that regard. They did, however, evince alarm at the growing movement to cut admissions.

Felix Feist, MGM's sales director, expressed hope that Metro's present 15-cent minimum would be raised.

Ned Depinet, RKO distribution chief, refused to comment. The present minimum in RKO's contracts is 10 cents.

John D. Clark, in charge of sales for Fox Film, said: "Our contracts for the coming year are not made up, nor has any definite course of action with regard to admissions been decided upon." However, opinions on 10-cent houses are well known; Fox sales policies will be influenced accordingly.

"Any admission lower than 10 cents would be injurious to the industry," said A. W. Smith, sales manager of Warner-First National. "This is our present minimum. If it goes higher, so much the better."

Jack Schlaifer, of Universal, said the present minimum of Universal's contract is 10 cents and that he could not say what action might be taken.

"It is too far ahead to forecast any definite change in minimum prices," said Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures.

Paramount officials would not discuss the situation.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational-World Wide, declared against exclusives. Joe Goldberg, general sales manager, said: "Our company approves the flexible admission idea and will adopt it.

Worth Trial, Says Feist

Felix Feist, sales manager of MGM, which has been the principal seller of exclusives, said: "I think the flexible admission plan is well worth a trial. However, in our own case, we must try the exclusive-run plan first. As a matter of fact, we are only beginning it. Quite a few of our fairly recent pictures were released under the terms of the old contract, which does not permit exclusive showings. The problem faced by all distributors is not only to protect our first runs, but increase grosses. Only the pictures on which money is spent can be good. If quality production is to continue, experiments, too, will have to continue for sound, sane, economical reasons." He said it is difficult to judge the results and much too soon.

However, there have been reports that Metro had finished selling exclusives, at least for this season. Evidently its failure in some localities has prompted the company to try lowered admissions as a stimulus. Kansas City, one of the first cities in which Metro installed exclusives, in a Loew theatre, did not take to exclusives and the company drastically reduced prices two weeks ago. Loew's State in Providence, likewise an unsuccessful user of exclusives, reduced admissions from a 60 cents top to 25 cents.

Al Lichtman, vice-president in charge of distribution at United Artists, and author of the exclusive-run idea, said flexible admissions might possibly interest a larger number of exhibitors than exclusives. "I am just as much interested in my own plan as ever," he said "Of course, it is still in the experimental stage. My idea was to get the business people of the industry to differentiate between quality pictures and others. You cannot sell a picture at 50 cents one day and 10 cents the next—and do it profitably. Among other things, my proposal was designed to assist in the protection of large theatre investments."

Mr. Lichtman was insistent that exclusives have worked out all right thus far. However, he added that the Kent plan might possibly be the solution to the industry's distribution problems. He denied reports that the recent exclusives deal with Loew's, whereby United Artists pictures are shown in 20 cities, was to be cancelled.

Cities Unfairness at Present

"Distributors will attempt with flexible admissions to raise the level of the 10-cent theatre," said an executive of the MPPDA. "If these owners decide not to embrace flexibles, they will have to show product in keeping with their scale. One of the worst situations in the industry is the lack of stabilization of box-office prices. The situation is chaotic; exhibitors were panicky and they thought that drastic reductions would alleviate the situation."

In defending a 25-cent minimum as provided for by flexible admissions, he pointed out that distributors and many theatre owners feel that the present condition is unfair which permits owners of small houses, paying an average of $10 to $12.50 per day for rentals, and charging 10 cents, the right to show identical pictures, a few days later, as owners of larger properties in which there has been invested $125,000 or more and which theatre must pay distributors from $120 to $125 for daily rental. These owners, it is said, are compelled to charge higher admissions and as a result suffer from the unfair competition of the 10-cent operators.

Mr. Kent's argument for flexible admissions is based on the fact that 50 per cent of the average exhibitor's net is earned from the 50 to 60 ace pictures released yearly.

Proponents of the plan in all quarters of distribution point out that its eventual success is entirely dependent upon the thoroughness of educating patrons to the merits of the idea. "It must be practiced in good faith," said an MPPDA official. "If an exhibitor takes advantage of the public and 'rings in' a 'flop' there is likely to be trouble."

Open to Competitors Also

The basis of rental charges would remain the same. On percentage deals, distributors are expected to benefit correspondingly by increased business and the higher admission on ace showings. Exhibitors already pay higher flat rentals on specials.

Where protection and zoning permits, acceptance of the 25-cent minimum plan by an exhibitor in one community does not prevent competitors from doing likewise.

Distributors will not tell exhibitors charging 10 cents, or 15, that they cannot play the ace group, but they will insist that the scale be made to conform with the plan.

See New Exhibitor Policies

Thousands of exhibitors are expected next season to change their operating policies in line with the flexible idea. The average theatre in which the plan will be used now changes programs four times weekly, playing three double-day bookings and one single, on Saturday, when western, adventure and other material of appeal to children is screened at 15 cents. On other days, 20 cents is the average price. According to Mr. Kent's plan, the so-called "ace" picture would get an extra day's booking, playing Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at a 25-cent minimum and probably a 35-cent top. The increase, therefore, would be from 5 to 15 cents above the average 20-cent scale. Weak product would be spotted in on Mondays and Tuesdays, at 15 cents. Average features would be played Sundays at 20 cents. This would enable the exhibitor to play the usual number of features of an average or below average caliber.

Another phase of the plan revolves around standardization of gauging quality in the public's mind.

It was learned confidentially this week that one distributor adherent of the exclusive run plan is now finding difficulty in merchandising pictures originally scheduled to play "exclusively." The company has abandoned the policy in several localities and is now attempting to book new product which it had held from general sale earlier in the season to play as exclusive runs. They now find that exhibitors already are booked solid. In a few situations, the company is receiving one-day bookings on this product, which ordinarily would command two or three days.

[Additional phases of the flexible admissions plan and comment of other leaders in the industry, will appear in next week's issue.]

FOX TAKING OVER EDUCATIONAL'S SALES AND PHYSICAL DISTRIBUTION

Deal Precipitated by Bankers To Effect Operating Economies Covers All Educational and World Wide Pictures

Fox Film Corporation on Monday will take over the sales and physical distribution of all Educational and World Wide pictures. Bankers who are interested in both corporations precipitated the move to effect operating economies.

The Educational-World Wide-KBS properties operated by Earle W. Hammons will immediately withdraw from the field of distribution and become producers exclusively of short subjects and features which will be merchandised through the nationwide Fox distributing system under a five-year plan.

Tuesday night Mr. Hammons and Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, issued a joint statement, as follows:

> "Following the trend of the times for greater economy and operation, it was decided by both companies that more efficiency could be obtained by placing the sales and physical distribution of Educational and World Wide pictures with the Fox organization.
> "There will be no interruption in the service given to theatres by Educational. In fact, it is expected this economy will lead to more efficient service for these exhibitors.
> "Educational Films will continue to maintain its home office sales force and advertising department. Every effort will be made to retain as many of the Educational field personnel as possible. Both the Educational short subjects and the World Wide feature programs will be continued."

The significance of the sudden move is its at least inferential relation to the recent discussions of all large distributors to effect an industry-wide agreement for physical handling of prints. Furthermore, it is the crystallization in an early form of the efforts of the various banking groups to bring about operating agreements for the economic betterment of the industry.

Fresh from conferences with the bankers, Mr. Hammons verified various reports and rumors that other movements of a like nature are in the offing. He said: "This deal is but the forerunner of many similar movements which will be brought about because of the economic situation." Mr. Hammons implied, however, that physical concentration will be the basis of future moves, and not necessarily a merger of sales effort, as provided in Educational's new arrangement with Fox.

Industry economists are said to be highly favorable toward a unification of physical exchange efforts. They have been studying and planning a physical merger for quite some time as the cure-all for many of the industry's economic ills and as a means of lowering operating overhead. The plan was discussed at length in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on December 17.

"The identity of our companies will be continued," said Mr. Hammons. "I believe that in order to eliminate duplication and waste, thereby reducing overhead, others in the business will be compelled to make arrangements such as this before the industry is returned to a paying basis."

Savings to Educational by eliminating its exchange system will approximate $1,000,000 annually. Fox will benefit by further utilization of its physical machinery, for which the company will be paid a percentage of gross rentals accruing on Educational pictures.

Foreign distribution of Educational-World Wide is in no way affected by the deal with Fox. Educational will continue to sell foreign territorial rights to independent or other distributors abroad.

Educational exchanges in practically all key cities will be darkened as soon as records can be transferred to the Fox exchanges. However, Fox has the option of utilizing Educational exchanges in those cities where the Fox branches are considered inadequate. Wires were dispatched to the Educational field forces late Tuesday ordering dismissal of all sales workers except division and branch managers and one booker and a cashier in each branch. The managers, according to Mr. Hammons, will in many cases assume short subject sales duties under Fox supervision and as Fox employees.

Home Office Status

The status of various home office officials under Mr. Hammons was not definitely established up to press time. Jack Skirball and Joe Goldberg, sales executives, will continue, said Mr. Hammons. The official announcement said that the advertising and home office sales departments would not be disturbed. It is understood that other workers at New York headquarters received dismissal notices immediately after conclusion of negotiations on Tuesday. Final details of the deal were worked out over the week-end and on Monday between Mr. Kent and Mr. Hammons and counsel of both organizations.

The principals are now compiling a record of the leases on field offices of Educational. Commitments on many branches will not expire for some time. The physical changeover from one set of exchanges to another will be completed within three weeks.

Announcement of new sales heads to supervise Educational sales activities is expected from Mr. Kent within a few days. He is understood to be considering several candidates.

The Educational staff in New York will in some cases work with and in others under direct supervision of Fox home office executives. The Educational advertising and publicity department, it was said, will continue to handle advertising independently, with Gordon S. White, advertising director, working with Charles E. McCarthy, of Fox, on copy.

When Mr. Kent joined Fox last year, he is understood to have decided to build up a short subjects department. Fox had no shorts except the single series of Movietone "Magic Carpets," which are produced by Truman Talley and his Fox Newsreel organization. Mr. Kent is said to have voiced the opinion that a complete list of short subjects is essential to a company program.

Exchanges in 29 Cities

The corporaitons each operate exchanges in 29 key cities, as follows: Albany, Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Charlotte, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Haven, New Orleans, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle and Washington, D. C.

Educational alone has a shipping center at Louisville and Fox has exchanges in three cities in which Educational does not maintain branches, namely, Butte, Memphis and Portland, Ore.

Educational will service its theatre accounts up to midnight, Sunday.

There appeared to be some doubt as to the future status of William Saal, Sam Bischoff and Burt Kelly, the executive triumvirate of KBS, a feature production unit of Educational. Mr. Hammons said Wednesday that regardless of the future personnel composition of the company's units, production will continue on features.

Principals responsible for launching the negotiations were executives of the Chase National Bank, which controls Fox, and which is a creditor of the Educational group. Electrical Research Products, likewise an important creditor of both, also participated. Educational is understood to have borrowed approximately $1,000,000 from Chase for KBS production and for distribution activities of World Wide. Whitehall Trust Company and the Hudson Bay interests are large holders of Educational securities. Dillon, Read and Company handled the Educational stock issue.

No Bearing on Corporate Structure

Mr. Kent on Wednesday further amplified the official announcement, saying: "We are merely doing a job for Educational. Our arrangement, covering sales and physical distribution, has no bearing from any angle on the corporate structure of Educational or on its plans. The arrangement likewise has no bearing on Educational entity."

The Educational short subject program calls for two-reel comedy series, including Andy Clyde comedies, Moran and Mack, Mermaid starring Harry Langdon, Variety, and Torchy. Others are Kendall-de Vally Operalogues, the Gleasons sports featurettes, Ideal comedies and a group of single reel pictures consisting of the Baby Burlesks, Terry-toons, Tom Howard comedies, Battle For Life series, Broadway Gossip, Do You Remember, Brave Naturgraphs, Camera Adventures, The Spirit of the Campus featuring Reinald Werrenrath, and Hodge-Podge.

BANKRUPTCY LAW REFORM LIKELY TO BE ACTED UPON THIS SESSION

Bill Reported to House Provides Debtor or Creditors May Move for Readjustment Subject to Court Approval

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Legislation designed to make possible the reorganization of concerns experiencing financial difficulties, without the liquidation of assets through the usual bankruptcy procedure, is before the House of Representatives at Washington with the probability that bankruptcy reform will be one of the few problems of the depression to be acted upon during the present session of Congress.

Under the bill reported to the House, in which are incorporated the best features of a half-dozen measures introduced by various members, either a debtor or his creditors may move for readjustment of indebtedness, the petitioner submitting a plan designed to be fair to all parties in the case, which the court could approve or reject.

Adoption of bankruptcy legislation is expected to pave the way for numerous reorganizations in the picture as well as other fields, since a well-defined method of procedure is laid down in the bill before the House.

The bill provides that any corporation may announce its inability to meet its debts as they require and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization. This it may do by petition to the proper court or in an answer to a creditors' petition in involuntary bankruptcy.

Plan of Reorganization

After certain formalities are complied with, a plan of reorganization is to be submitted which "(1) shall include a proposal to modify or alter the rights of creditors generally, or of any class of them, secured or unsecured, either through the issuance of new securities of any character or otherwise; (2) may include, in addition, provisions altering the rights of stockholders generally, or of any class of them; (3) shall provide adequate means for the execution of the plan, which may include the transfer of all or any part of the property of the debtor to another corporation or to other corporations, or the consolidation of the properties of the debtor with those of another corporation, and the issuance of securities of either the debtor or any such corporation or corporations, for cash, or in exchange for existing securities, or in satisfaction of claims or rights, or for other appropriate purposes; and (4) may deal with all or any part of the property of the debtor."

This plan is subject to approval by the court. If accepted, the court may appoint trustees to put it into effect and fix the time within which the reorganization is to be carried out. If held by the court to be acceptable and not proposed or accepted within such reasonable time as may be fixed, the court may dismiss the case and order liquidation of the corporation; liquidation would also occur if the plan proposed did not meet with the approval of the court.

No plan of reorganization would be confirmed until it had been accepted in writing by or or on behalf of creditors holding two-thirds in amount of the claims of each class whose claims or interests have been allowed and would be affected by the plan, unless adequate provision is made in the plan for the protection of the interests of any class of creditors or stockholders, whose approval then is not required.

The whole purpose of the legislation, it was stressed by members, active in its framing, is to keep industrial machinery in operation by compromise. Thus, it was explained, if a man owes $300 and has only $100, a bankruptcy proceeding might yield for the creditors only $50, the remainder being eaten up in expenses of the settlement, while if they deferred action and agreed to take what he could afford to pay them, they might receive $85 or even $100, and the debtor could still remain in business.

Would Keep Machinery Going

The need for legislation of this nature was brought to the attention of Congress by Attorney General Mitchell early in December. No action was taken, however, until President Hoover on January 11 pointed out in a special message that bankruptcy legislation was recommended last February, that nothing had been done to deal with the situation, and that if Congress could not see its way clear to comprehensive revision of the statutes at this time, it should at least deal with some of the more pressing phases of the situation. The President said:

"The process of forced liquidation through foreclosure and bankruptcy sale of the assets of individual and corporate debtors, who through no fault of their own are unable in the present emergency to provide for the payment of their debts in ordinary course as they mature, is utterly destructive of the interests of debtor and creditors alike, and if this process is allowed to take its usual course misery will be suffered by thousands without substantial gain to their creditors, who insist upon liquidation and foreclosure in the vain hope of collecting their claims.

Present Procedure "Destructive"

"The proposals to amend the bankruptcy act by providing for the relief of debtors who seek the protection of the court for the purpose of readjusting their affairs with their creditors, carry no stigma of an adjudication in bankruptcy and are designed to extend the protection of the court to the debtor and his property, while an opportunity is afforded the debtor and a majority of his creditors to arrange an equitable settlement of his affairs, which upon approval of the court will become binding upon minority creditors.

"Under such process it should be possible to avoid destructive liquidation through the composition and extension of individual indebtedness and the reorganization of corporations, with the full protection of the court extended to the rights and interests of creditors and debtors alike."

There are pending in the Senate a number of similar measures, some one or combination of which is expected to be favorably reported soon.

Double Features Of Opposite Type Called Bad Policy

The continuous showing of double bills containing features of opposite type will finally result in members of the two classes of people to which the pictures appeal being disgusted with half the show, is the contention of Dr. Manfred A. Carter, once associate pastor of the Washington Park Episcopal Church of Providence, in an address before the Better Films Council of Providence, R. I., recently.

"A great many people are concerned in having good movies instead of bad but very few seem concerned in determining what good movies are," said Dr. Carter. "A good movie to the box office is one which brings in an immediate return in cash receipts, but the box office is near sighted. To sacrifice the good will of schools, churches, clubs and various organizations, whose good will might be of inestimable value, for the sake of a small, immediate result, is short sighted."

Dr. Carter indicated that the church is not necessarily an ideal judge of good motion pictures because of certain inherent prejudices.

Roxy Gets Arthur; Heading Fox-Poli

Harry Arthur, operating head of Fox New England Theatres, is back at his old post at the Seventh Avenue Roxy, which he will operate. There have been various rumors that Mr. Arthur had turned back the operation of the Fox-Poli theatres to Fox, that he was about to form his own circuit, and that he would tie up with Fanchon & Marco.

Bert Adler, of F. and M., explained that Mr. Arthur's connection with Fanchon & Marco has existed for some time as director of Stage Shows, Inc., a subsidiary company. Mr. Adler also said that under the new administration at the Roxy there would be Fanchon & Marco stage shows on the bill besides feature pictures.

It is expected that Mr. Arthur soon will announce that interest charges on $14,000,000 worth of bonds, out of which $10,000,000 was received by S. Z. Poli as part payment for the sale of his theatres to Fox New England in 1929, can not be paid.

Other changes at the Seventh Avenue Roxy include acquisition by Harry Singer of the post vacated by Frank Cambria last week as managing director; Norman Schwartz, former stage manager at the theatre, will be the new house manager, and Jack Partington, stage show producer, will be directly associated with Mr. Arthur. Howard S. Cullman, receiver, continues as representative for the bondholders.

That Christmas business fell off in comparison with the Yuletide of 1931 is shown in the graph, compiled from weekly box office receipts appearing in Motion Picture Herald. Grosses of theatres in nineteen cities, for the period of December and the first two weeks in January, were taken. The average weekly gross in the given nineteen cities during the six weeks period in 1931-32 is taken as 100 per cent and the other values are plotted accordingly. The cities used are Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Denver, Detroit, Hollywood, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Montreal, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Philadelphia, Portland, San Francisco and Seattle.

RKO Receivers Sought in Three Separate Actions

Four minority security holders of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation this week filed petitions for receivership for the corporation in three separate actions filed in New York, Newark, N. J., and Baltimore.

Alfred West, manager of the aviation division of Bancamerica-Blair Corporation, filed a petition in New York federal court for an equity receiver for RKO. Mr. West, in the petition, stated that he is the owner of $5,000 of the gold notes, $731,000 of which were due Bancamerica-Blair on Jan. 1, 1932, but which were extended by agreement until Jan. 1, 1933. The petition alleges that on January 1 RKO was in default on the $731,000 payment. The total note issue was $3,440,138.

No Date Set for Hearing

Herman Zohbel, RKO treasurer, refused to discuss the matter. He did, however, admit the existence of the indebtedness, and said that the corporation had received a three months extension. He implied that there was a possibility of raising the sum from the Rockefeller interests, which already are large RKO stockholders.

Mr. West's petition, prepared by Robert H. Neilson, attorney, set forth that RKO showed a profit for 1930, but that in 1931 it operated at a loss of $5,660,770, and for the first nine months of 1932, at a loss of $4,964,311.

The Wall Street Journal estimates the outstanding funded debt of the corporation at $61,022,572, of which $21,569,000 is a direct obligation of the parent company, and $39,000,000 in bonds and mortgages of subsidiaries. There are 2,446,299 shares of common stock outstanding.

In 1931, Bancamerica-Blair, bankers for Pathe Exchange, Inc., loaned for one year $3,440,138 in 6 per cent gold notes to RKO to fund indebtedness incurred by RKO's acquisition of Pathe assets. Under an extension of the entire loan from Jan. 1, 1932, to Jan. 1, 1933, the notes were secured under an indenture dated in December, 1931, between RKO and the Chemical Bank & Trust Company as trustees.

There has been no date set for the hearing of Mr. West's petition.

Following the West petition, three more complainants filed petitions in Baltimore and in Newark, N. J. In the New Jersey suit, Vice-Chancellor Alfred A. Stein appointed Abe J. David, prosecutor of Union County, and Arthur Walsh, vice-president of the Thomas A. Edison Industries, Inc., as temporary receivers to take over all properties and interests of RKO in the state of New Jersey.

The complainant in this petition is Doris L. Charing, of Newark, who stated she holds a note for $2,000 against the corporation.

In commenting upon the New Jersey situation, Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, said:

"The action of the New Jersey state court in appointing temporary receivers for RKO was taken without any notice to the corporation or its officers. RKO is not incorporated in New Jersey and owns no property in that state.

"It is assumed that the court action was taken under a misapprehension as to these facts, and that the proceedings will be promptly dismissed."

Mr. Aylesworth declined to comment on the petition of Alfred West, and had nothing to say about the Baltimore suit.

Charge "Gross Mismanagement"

The RKO theatre department reported that the circuit operates 17 theatres in 10 New Jersey towns. Thirteen theatres, totaling 23,907 seats, are now open, and four, with 5,336 seats, are dark.

In the Baltimore action, the plaintiffs, Joseph H. Basker and Edward Goldman, of Boston, who said they held 625 shares of RKO common stock, alleged "gross mismanagement" of RKO for the benefit of RCA, and claim that transfer of 500,000 shares of class B stock to RCA was illegal. Circuit Court Judge H. Arthur Stump allowed the corporation until February 7 to show cause why the receivership should not be granted.

A further suit, filed in Baltimore circuit court, No. 2, by Edward J. Hickey, holding 175 shares of class A stock, asks that the refinancing plan of RKO be stopped, alleging that the plan aims at putting RCA in control.

Theatre and Film To Fit Audiences, Ramsaye Tells Club

The coming of sharper classifications for audiences of varying social, cultural and economic strata, in both theatres and the screen wares to be exhibited, was forecast by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, speaking before the Theatre Group, a subsidiary organization of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, on a program devoted to the motion picture, held at the Hotel Astor, Tuesday.

"The showmanship of the day, even the best of it, shows us a muddled, uncertain and contradictory state of policy," observed Mr. Ramsaye. "The motion picture has fought its way up from a small part as a vaudeville turn to the point where the show has become all motion picture, but it is still a vaudeville show, a variety show on the screen. Generally speaking, in one fashion or another, a motion picture show tends to follow the familiar pattern evolved years ago by Mr. S. L. Rothafel, which means an overture, a dash of newsreel, a cartoon, maybe a bit of scenic, a sprinkle of dancing, and a feature picture.

"But this policy takes little or no cognizance of the fact that now the feature picture has become so complete and self-competent a unit that it does not fit or pertain to the variety-show-of-pictures program. We are getting in screen product able renditions of strong, full length dramas, complete in every sense.

"Clearly enough the screen has supplanted the stage, clearly enough it is in a dominant national and world sense the theatre of today. Look a moment at the time proven technique of presentation. From Charles Frohman and David Belasco of yesteryear to Max Gordon and Sam Harris of today no stage showman even considers cluttering his presentations of drama with a mess of song and dance and curtain raisers.

"There is unquestionably a large place for the continuance of the present policy of 'variety-shows-on-the-screen' as a major element of house classifications, but the need is indicated for the screen theatre which shall more directly and accurately serve screen destiny in supplanting the now vanishing theatre of the stage, a theatre which is devoted to the presentation of screen drama, not screen potpourri."

Mrs. Norman Rieser was chairman of the cinema session. Mrs. William Baldwin Smith, New York state motion picture chairman for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, attended. Michael Simmons, scenario editor for Monogram Pictures, was the master of ceremonies and spoke at length on the motion picture as America's great contribution to the great arts. Dudley Murphy, RKO director, spoke in behalf of pictures for intelligent minorities and the service of screen theatres for the classes apart from the masses and mass limitations.

"HAD THEIR EYE ON HOLLYWOOD"

Says DeCasseres of Ben Hecht and Gene Fowler and "The Great Magoo"; Six Plays Discussed

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THE GREAT MAGOO

Ben Hecht and Gene Fowler had their eye, first of all, on Hollywood in writing "The Great Magoo." As a play it is whale-tripe and dog-meat, with Rabelaisian and sometimes very funny dialogue and cracks, which Messrs. Hecht and Fowler will have to tone down considerably for the screen.

"The Great Magoo" is, however, strong picture stuff. It is back-stage Coney Island and ham-fat musical ballyhoo. Every one in it is a tough, a nut or a faker. It is bunk reduced to its lowest terms.

A flagpole sitter, a band leader, side-show ballyhooers, a flea-circus, gum-chewing wigglers and Boardwalk Belascos stream through the eight scenes. As characters, they yelp for the camera.

The Great Magoo is a hot lover. This hot lover, Nicky (Paul Kelly), is in love with Julie Raquel—both in the side-show business. He takes to drink and she picks up with several guys who rob her. But Nicky and Julie are finally welded (as you guessed).

The best scene in the show for sheer fun goes to Harry Green as Moe Weber, a Cossack band leader. Hecht and Fowler have smeared the paint on thick on all their characters. And there's "music" here and there. It'll click.

Picture value, 80 per cent.

THE DU BARRY

Well, they again dug up DuBarry, the fluzie that made a boob of a king and finally got necked by Dr. Guillotine, and Carl Millocker, whose music used to send grandmother's feet a-tapping when Dan Frohman was still playing marbles. And it made a resounding hit, with Grace Moore, lately of Otto Kahn's emporium, as DuBarry.

This ought to go into the flicks. And Grace Moore ought to be taken over with it. She's simply AAA. The music is the grand old melodious stuff before hoofers stamped Strauss to death. Charm and enchantment are the essence of this show.

And the scenario is all laid out. All it needs is snappy dialogue.

Of course, it will take more than twelve cents to put it on—but it'll knock the record at the b.o. or I'm no grand guesser.

Picture value, 90 per cent.

JAMBOREE

For "Jamboree" Jack Black and Bessie Beatty went back to the nineties, when the West had such heroic characters as Bull Con Josie and Salt Chunk Mary. They make Capone look like an English Lord at Westminster.

In this play Salt Chunk Mary runs Pocatello. We open on Mary in the back room of her bar, where she is in a huddle with a bunch of criminals. One of these stick-'em-ups is a tenderfoot.

Well, you know Mary is going to melt for him—he's so young! She mothers him. The local constabs arrive and are going to pinch the kid for the murder of a lady of uneasy virtue. Of course, Mary defends the sappy youth, plays some tricks on the Mulrooneys of Pocatello—and (we all guessed it) discovers that the kid is her own baby.

Mary is quite a character as played by Marie Kenney. (Oh, yes, the boy's father also turns up.) There are a lot of shooting angles and excitement during the progress of this masterpiece.

Maybe Bill Hart could be dug up for this—and Flora Finch. And they sing "After the Ball."

Picture value, 20 per cent.

THE MAD HOPES

If you liked "Trouble in Paradise"—and I think it was a superb film—you will wait around with high expectations for a delectable time when Herr Lubitsch gets ready to do "The Mad Hopes," by Romney Brent. For this play is Lubitsch, and nothing but Lubitsch.

As a grand piece of hilarious hokum it hardly jells as a play; but on the screen the crazy, high-hat, highly sophisticated Hope family and their unbelievable doings in the Chateau Sans-Souci in Nice will cause that laughter that floods you from gizzard to kopf.

These mad Hopes are Mrs. Clytemnestra Hope and her children. They are all in debt, but live like the Duke of El Dorado. None of them has any idea of how he or she is going to get a meal tomorrow.

They rope in Maurice Klein and an American friend, and the airy-fairy lunacy, pitted with slashingly humorous dialogue, goes down to the end—aided and abetted by Rex O'Malley, Violet Kemble Cooper and a raft of other scintillant players.

It's for the good reticule and diamond-stud trade and for a cast recruited from Oxford and Barnard. I will not allow any one but Herr Lubitsch to do this—and I want him to do it for me.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

THE DARK HOURS

I liked "The King of Kings" very much. It was the story of the greatest drama in history. And there is no scenario, by the way, ever written like the Four Gospels, even if you do not look on it with a religious mind.

Don Marquis, in "The Dark Hours," has taken the last hours of the Nazarene and made of it a furious tragic melodrama, in which the mob rules the stage.

The great figures are really Caiaphas, Judas and Lazarus. Especially Judas. He is not the villain of Mr. Marquis' play. He is here a great psychological study of a man possessed of devils. In the hands of Hugh Miller it was superb.

The Lazarus of Ian Bowers is also a tremendously impressive creation. With these characters and the scenes in the House of Caiaphas, the Garden of Gethsemane and the House of Pilate, I can see a picture immeasurably finer than the silent "The King of Kings." For the Marquis tragedy has more than mere religious meanings—it is universal theatre.

I'd like to see it done. And also to hear these characters utter their great lines! It will take an inspired director to do it.

Picture value, unknown.

THE BARRISTER

"The Barrister," by Sydney Stone, as a play is boob-porridge. But it has without doubt some genuine picture angles.

An English lawyer gives the air to a lady with whom he has been mixed up in order to marry the daughter of a lawyer.

Brother of the forsaken lady turns up. He has nerves—more nerves than Raymond Hatton. Also nerve. He demands jack in order to escape from a crime he has just committed. Scuffle. Brother is killed.

The lawyer conceals the accidental shooting (why, I leave to Mr. Stone's profound brain). The brother's sister—the same that the lawyer had jilted—now compels the lawyer to marry her on a threat of tossing him over to the bulls.

But in the third act, mates, Ackroyd of Scotland Yard is going to do his duty. But he doesn't. Why? Well, the lawyer convinces him of his innocence. Anyhow, the lady and the lawyer really loved another.

This piece of mustache wax might become something for the 10-cent trade.

Picture value, 20 per cent.

Publications Total Off, Ayer Directory Indicates

There were 82 fewer newspapers and periodicals published in the United States and Canada at the beginning of 1933 than last year, according to the latest edition of N. W. Ayer & Son's Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals. The 1933 total is noted at 21,109.

The directory indicates 2,368 dailies, with an aggregate circulation of 38,826,000, and 11,970 weekly newspapers, which compares with 2,415 dailies and 11,979 weeklies one year ago. The highest figure was reached in 1927, when the total of newspapers and periodicals was 24,868.

LEFT-HAND PAGES READ FIRST, SURVEY SHOWS

That the left-hand pages are the natural starting point of reading of newspapers, contrary to the general belief of advertising men, is the conclusion reached in a nine months survey of the reactions of 4,400 readers in subway and elevated trains and in the waiting rooms of the Grand Central and Pennsylvania railroad terminals in New York, according to a report made public by Professor Howard E. Nixon of the School of Business, Columbia University. E. Ralph Schaefer, graduate of the school, made the survey.

For each reader who gave prior attention to the right hand pages, three looked first at the left-hand page.

"The fact that the left-hand page possesses a decided advantage over the right-hand page in regard to initial attention," Mr. Schaefer said, "is of sufficient importance to suggest a modification of the present preference shown. I do not attempt to outline any method of accomplishing such a change, but merely express a belief that at present the right-hand page is enjoying an undeserved degree of the partiality of advertisers, and, consequently, that an increasing importance should be attached to the left-hand page of newspapers.

Tabs and Others Observed

Note was made whether the newspaper was of tabloid or standard size.

"Observations obtained were tabulated in groups of twenty-five within each individual classification, as, for instance, twenty-five observations of men reading tabloids in trains," the report said. "These were then divided according to which page gained the reader's initial attention.

"The observations were tabulated in order as they were recorded on the tally sheet."

Of 4,400 readers, Mr. Schaefer said, 3,013 first had their attention fixed by the left-hand page, while 1,387 turned to the right-hand page. Tabloid readers followed this procedure in the ratio of 1,513 to 637, while readers of newspapers of standard size turned to the left-hand pages first in the proportion of 1,500 to 700. Mr. Schaefer's tabulated and classified totals follow:

	Subtotals		Totals
	Left	Right	Left	Right
A. MEN,
1. Tabloid—
a. Train	256	144	...	...
b. Waiting Room	473	227	729	371
2. Regular—
a. Train	286	114	...	...
b. Waiting Room	448	252	734	366
Total Men			1,463	737
B. WOMEN,
1. Tabloid—
a Train	289	111	...	...
b. Waiting Room	495	205	784	316
2. Regular—
a. Train	274	111	...	...
b. Waiting Room	492	208	766	334
Total Women			1,550	650
Grand Total			3,013	1,387

Mr. Schaefer said many readers start from the back of the paper and read toward the front. He also concluded that it was reasonable to believe that persons following a continued article would fix their initial attention on the page containing that article.

"The actual observation of 4,400 newspaper readers shows that the left-hand page enjoys an initial attention advantage," the report said. "Prima facie, there is no significant difference between the sexes or places where newspapers are read, in regard to initial fixation of attention.

"If it were granted that initial attention to a page was the prime objective, the problem would end here. However, there are other factors of importance to the advertiser, publisher and advertising man, which must be discussed in their relation to this established situation.

"In viewing these considerations, it may be seen that the advantage of the left-hand page over the right-hand page or vice versa is not a wholly determinant factor. The fact that the left-hand page is superior is of less importance to an advertiser who can best appeal to a certain class by having his advertising placed on a certain page. In other words, this importance will vary with advertising policy and the media employed."

Frank Walker Commissioned As Colonel of Texas Rangers

Frank C. Walker, counsel for the Comerford theatres, last week was presented with a commission as a colonel of the Texas Rangers from the governor of Texas, at a ceremony in Mr. Walker's New York office at Democratic National Headquarters. James A. Farley, chairman of the national committee, made the presentation.

Louis M. Howe, personal adviser to President-elect Roosevelt, and himself a colonel of Kentucky, also spoke. Also the recipient of a colonelcy of Texas was W. Forbes Morgan, assistant to Mr. Walker as treasurer of the Democratic National Committee.

City College Plans Course In Study of Motion Picture

The College of the City of New York has instituted a course on "The Art of the Motion Picture," to be conducted by Irving A. Jacoby, intended for "the intelligent movie-goer, the student of comparative art, and members of the motion picture industry who seek the proper perspective of films."

Sixteen lectures will be given in the course, each lecture to concentrate on a different phase of the motion picture. The course is to be supplemented by showings of important pictures no longer exhibited. The history, present trend and probable future of the motion picture will be considered.

RKO Gets Tax Reductions

RKO has obtained assessment reductions totaling $22,209,935 and cumulative tax savings of $640,797 on theatre properties during the three-year period ended December 31, 1932. The reductions were handled by the company's tax attorney, F. H. White.

Reel Innovator

ALLYN BUTTERFIELD

Universal Reel Has New Device

Universal Talking Newsreel, with its current release, has inaugurated a new type of traveling title, in which the date line and heading introducing each subject in the reel moves across the screen in a manner similar to the moving electric sign.

Allyn Butterfield, editor of the newsreel, is credited with being the creator of the new device, which is known as the Giant Traveltype. Claimed as advantages of the innovation are its movement, in keeping with the subject matter; greater legibility, due to the larger letters possible, and the introduction of an improvement in the newsreel field. The slight let-down said to be caused by the ordinary printed title of the reel, will be eliminated with the device, it is claimed.

Mr. Butterfield has been with the Universal reel since it began. He started in the industry with Vitagraph in 1915, and turned to the newsreel in 1923, joining the International Newsreel staff. He joined the Universal staff in 1929, as associate editor under Sam B. Jacobson, the editor.

Loew Firm Shows Gain

Loew's Theatre and Realty Corporation, a subsidiary of Loew's, Inc., which controls 20 properties across the country, showed a net income for the year ended August 31 of $480,950, which compares with $62,653 for the previous year. The figure was reached after deductions for federal taxes, depreciation, interest and other charges.

Rialto Posts Notice

The Rialto theatre, first Broadway house to inaugurate flexible admissions, posted a two-week closing notice last week. According to Boris Morris of Publix, the theatre will remain open for as long after the notice is effective as weekly gross justify.

ADMISSIONS SLASHED ON AVERAGE OF 25 PER CENT IN CURRENT MOVEMENT

Theatres in Only a Few Key Cities Resist General Price Lowering; Circuits Defend Reductions as Imperative

Giveaways, Two-for-One Admissions and Other Concessions Superseded by Cutting of Minimum-Maximum Scales

Admissions at motion picture theatres have been reduced on an average of 25 per cent in the price-cutting movement which is currently sweeping the country. Distributors and exhibitors alike express concern.

With but few exceptions, price revisions are the order of the day. Only in San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Birmingham, Cincinnati, Houston and a few other key centers has the movement failed to gain ground.

Continuing nationwide inquiry regarding the extent of reductions by circuits and independent exhibitors, a summarization of which appeared last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, it was learned that giveaways, two-for-one admissions and other forms of box office concessions have been superseded by a general lowering of minimum and maximum scales.

In some territories independents blame circuits for the situation. In others, the circuits say they were forced to cut by competitive action of the neighborhood houses.

An analysis of the situation, by cities, follows:

Baltimore First-Runs Cut

Practically all first-run houses in Baltimore have lowered their top admission price on week-days to 40 cents, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays remaining at 50 cents plus tax. In neighborhood houses with few exceptions standard admissions prevail, 10 and 15 cents for matinees, and 15 and 25 cents for nights.

No San Francisco Reductions

No general reductions in admission prices with the exception of Fox West Coast have been made in the San Francisco field. Minor reductions in top prices have been made in individual cases. Fox West Coast has reduced prices in San Mateo, Burlingame, Redwood City and Palo Alto from 40 to 25 cents.

Balcony 25 Cents Any Time

In Birmingham three leading first-runs have adopted a policy of "balcony seats any time for 25 cents."

Boston "Met" Reduces

Publix Metropolitan in Boston had maintained its 75-cent top since it opened, but it now has cut 10 cents. It still is the only first-run getting 65 cents. Admission prices have been cut at practically all the first-runs, and grosses have been practically maintained. Two RKO first-runs, the Boston and Keith, retain their minimums of 25-30 respectively, but top was cut 15 cents to 50 at the Boston, and 25 cents to 50 at the Keith. Loew's two first-runs, the Orpheum and State, have adopted a day and date policy and cut the 30-65 rate to 25-50, with elimination of vaudeville.

Shea Leads Price Cuts

Price revision took place in the Shea theatres before Publix turned them back to Michael Shea. The Buffalo now has a 55 cent top, tax included, after two cuts. The Century and Hippodrome, charging 55-cent top before vaudeville was discontinued, now have a 25-cent top.

Chicago Circuits Cut

Admission prices in practically all theatres in Chicago have been reduced. A general cut in neighborhood houses in October has been followed recently by further reductions by the Balaban & Katz and the Warner theatres. Some independents have talked of retaliation by radical reductions, but their leaders say such a move would be almost suicidal, as the circuits would cut again. First-run B&K houses in the loop, the Chicago, Oriental, United Artists, McVickers, and Roosevelt, with the advent of John Balaban in charge of operations, reduced admission from 75 cents top plus tax, to 68 cents plus tax. By further reductions the McVickers and Roosevelt are now offering first-run pictures at 25-35-55. RKO Palace is charging 25-35-50-75 with tax added, top charges for the city. The RKO State-Lake is down to 55 cents top with a straight picture policy. Warner and B & K neighborhood houses also have been generally cut.

Cincinnati Prices Maintain Level

In the circuit controlled situation here the only reduction of any consequence has been inaugurated at the RKO Albee, a cut of 10 cents to 65 top.

Cleveland Cuts 46 Per Cent

RKO Palace in Cleveland has cut its top from 75 cents with vaudeville to 40 with straight first-run pictures. Keith's has changed from combination at 50-cent top to straight pictures at 30. RKO Hippodrome has cut from a 50-cent top to 40 cents with vaudeville. The Allen and the Cameo, formerly Loew, have been taken over by independents and cut to 25 and 15 cents respectively. Warners' Lake, first-run, now has 50-cent top all week.

Dayton Bargain Rates

Within a single square downtown, Cooper's Lyric is offering picture and tab. at 10 and 15, the Ohio is featuring five vaudeville acts and picture at 10 cents, and the Rialto has six acts and a picture at 10. Further uptown, Loew's is playing first-runs, including exclusives, at a 15-cent matinee scale. Others maintain 15 and 25 matinees.

Low in Denver

The Denver and Orpheum are charging 45-cent top with tax added, as against 59 cents plus tax under the old stage show and film policy. The Rialto is getting 40-cent top, also the Paramount. The Orpheum and Rialto are RKO houses and the Denver and Paramount are Publix. Six neighborhood houses charge 10 cents top.

Detroit's "War" Starts

Anticipated price-slashing in first-runs has started in Detroit. RKO Downtown began with a 15-cent cut to 40. Fox next day announced a night top of 40. Publix has not yet announced cuts in the Michigan and United Artists, its downtown deluxers, but effective last week the Fisher, the uptown first-run, dropped stage shows for straight pictures with 40-cent top.

Minor Cuts at Harrisburg

Loew's Regent and three Wilmer & Vincent theatres, the State, Victoria and Colonial, have all cut their tops from 50 cents to 40.

Houston Untouched

Movements among large circuits to reduce admission prices have not yet hit Houston.

Indianapolis Battle On

A price cutting battle is occupying the first runs. Neighborhoods have also cut drastically.

Kansas City Watches

Owing to the Loew's cut, other first-runs are watching the experiment and the Midland competition. Outside Kansas City the situation differs with individual circuits.

Lancaster, Pa. Reduces

Leading first-runs in Lancaster have slashed prices. The RKO Colonial went from 50 cents top plus tax to 40 cents including tax. The Stanley-Warner Grand and Capitol announced the same reductions.

Small Los Angeles Houses Cut

Houses in outlying Los Angeles districts have come down in price in many cases. When first runs cut their scales went below those in several outlying areas, such as Warners' Beverly Hills, Fox's Wilshire, Warners' Western. These houses have now reduced to 35 and 45 with tax.

Fox Wisconsin Cut

With Fox's Wisconsin in Milwaukee going to straight pictures and adjusted prices, the Warner theatre and Fox's Palace also have reduced. All three now charge 45-cent top plus tax as against 65.

Reductions Old Story

Theatres in Minneapolis have long since made their adjustments in admission prices.

Saenger Circuit Cuts to 40 Cents

The entire Saenger circuit, operating in and around New Orleans, has cut to a 40-cent top, 70 houses being affected. Morning matinee prices are so low neighborhoods are concerned. Three United Theatre houses dropped prices this week to a 15-cent adult top, 5 for children.

Broadway's Low Scales Unprecedented

The glamour of New York's Broadway and Times Square district has not been strong enough to prevent a down-sweep of prices. A new low set at the Warner theatre has a 25-cent top from 2 p. m. to closing. The Paramount has come down to an 85-cent top as against $1.10. The Warner Strand has cut to a 65-cent top, including tax, from 85 plus tax. The Seventh Avenue Roxy has made balcony seats 35 at all times, and its top $1.10 instead of 99 cents. Further reduction is being considered. The new week-day scale at the Rivoli, United Artists house, is 35-55-75 as against $1.10 previous top. The Rialto and Mayfair are at 65 cents. The former top at the Rialto was $1.10 and the Mayfair was 85. The Rialto is also inaugurating flexible admissions. The Warner Winter Garden has 85-cent top as against $1.10. Radio City Music Hall, which opened with a straight stage show policy at $2.50 top, has gone to pictures with $1.65 top, retaining elaborate stage shows. The Capitol and Loew's State have dropped to 75, the Capitol from $1.65, and the State from 83. The Europa and Little Carnegie, two of the principal exhibitors of foreign films, have gone to 35 cents to 1 p. m., 40 for matinees and 65 including tax for evenings.

Only One Oklahoma City Cut

Admissions have been cut from 55 cents top to 40 at the Capitol.

Philadelphia Reductions

Stanley-Warner has announced a general cut

KING, PAINTER, SAVAGE

And More Diversified Characters Than That Are Portrayed in Week's Output of the Studios

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Fans of George Arliss will find his latest picture very much to their liking. In the role of a king who gets fed up with his job, takes a permanent vacation by abdicating, he is seen in a role that affords him many opportunities for his sly, quiet comedy, for dry wit and for moments of impressive drama. There is romance, and it is more convincing than some he has had with leading ladies many years his junior. This time his romantic affairs are divided between his wife, Florence Arliss, as the queen, and Marjorie Gateson, sweetheart of his princeling days.

Lavish production mountings characterize the royalty episodes, palaces that look like the real thing; costuming, pageantry in rich abundance. John Adolfi's direction is excellent. Mrs. Arliss is delightful as the queen, and further good support is given by Miss Gateson, O. P. Heggie, Dudley Digges and Dick Powell, young radio crooner, who is coming to the front rapidly as a screen juvenile.

"Face in the Sky" from Fox is a story with a fresh idea, charmingly done, a romance neatly spiced with comedy and drama. It features Spencer Tracy in one of his wise guy roles, this time as a sign painter who rises from the business of painting advertisements on rural cowsheds to Broadway skyscrapers. Out in the country he meets romance in the person of Marian Nixon, who follows him to New York, provides the inspiration for his greatest masterpiece, topping a Gotham building. Stuart Erwin poses as his dumb assistant, very dumb and very funny. Good old "Way Down East" heavies are provided by Russell Simpson and Frank McGlynn, Jr.

Of special interest is the fact that this is the first American made picture of an American artist who, while in Europe, abandoned his brushes and oils for the cinema, made several pictures abroad and then was signed by Fox. He is Harry Lachman, a talented artist in other fields who bids fair to contribute new and imaginative notes to American film direction. Mr. Lachman's first production indicates that he possesses a rather unusual combination, a practical sense of showmanship with artistic imagination. He handles his story, his people and his camera with pleasing, rhythmic results, but never goes "arty." He promises to become a valuable addition to Hollywood's directorial ranks.

Uproarious Farce Comedy

Columbia has turned out an uproarious farce comedy in "That's Africa," featuring Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, the former RKO comedy team which threatened for a while to break up. Without blushing or apologizing, but very good-naturedly, the producers borrowed from such hits as "Trader Horn," "Tarzan," "Strange Interlude," the Martin Johnson travelogues, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," and made a burlesque of adventures among the savages and the animals of deepest, darkest Africa. It provoked loud and frequent laughter among the paying customers when it was previewed in San Bernardino and Santa Monica, and the consensus is that it is one of the funniest pictures the Wheeler-Woolsey team ever has done. Veteran comedy director Eddie Cline handled the job, and the screen farce was written by a young man who wrote pieces for MOTION PICTURE HERALD before he "went Hollywood," Norman Krasna. Lew Lipton composed the original. Contributing to the hilarity are Esther Muir as the lady explorer; Berton Churchill, Raquel Torres and an enormous imitation gorilla who looks and acts surprisingly like the real thing.

Junior Laemmle already has acquired a reputation for daring to do the unusual. He has done it again with "Destination Unknown," the story of what happens to a ship load of hard boiled rum runners in danger of sinking. If you remember the type of character "The Stranger" was in that famous play, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," you will have a general idea of "The Stowaway." He becomes among them something of a reincarnation of Christ, settling their quarrels, bringing peace and, finally, safety. The cast, an excellent one, is all men with the single exception of Betty Compson, and includes Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy (who plays the Stowaway), Alan Hale, Russell Hopton, Tom Brown, Noel Madison, Stanley Fields, Willard Robertson and others. Tay Garnett directed from a story by Tom Buckingham.

Novelty in Murder Mystery

Ben Schulberg has introduced considerable novelty and a lot of interesting suspense in his latest Paramount picture, "The Crime of the Century." It should prove a winner with that large audience which likes its mystery thrills. One novel departure is the stopping of the picture for a full minute, while a clock ticks off sixty seconds, to give the audience a chance to guess who is the murderer. The preview audience seemed thoroughly to enjoy this unusual procedure.

The cast is excellent, with Stuart Erwin particularly entertaining in the role of a dumb reporter. Others include Wynne Gibson, Jean Hersholt, David Landau, Robert Elliott, Frances Dee.

Nate B. Spingold Gets Columbia Position

Nate B. Spingold, formerly associated with the late Harry Reichenbach, will assume an executive position at Columbia February 1. According to Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia, Mr. Spingold's duties probably will be in the field of exploitation.

Mr. Spingold has been active as a publicity agent, with offices at 444 Madison avenue, New York.

Admission Prices Cut 25 Per Cent

at most of its theatres, ranging from 10 per cent to 33 1/3 per cent, including the downtown Boyd, Stanley, Stanton and Karlton. Cuts also extend to many neighborhood and suburban houses. Some independents are incensed by the Stanley-Warner move in neighborhood price scales, but others say it was inevitable. The Boyd and Stanley have a 50-cent top after 6 p. m. plus tax, as against 75.

Pittsburgh Rates Regular

Regular rates prevail. All houses reduced last summer to come within the tax exemption figure. Several independent houses are adding four or five acts. A recent cut at two Warners houses in Steubenville, Ohio, to 25 cents top may have some effect locally.

Portland Lowest in History

Prices at the Fox Broadway, Portland ace, have just been reduced 38 per cent to a record low. RKO Orpheum, with stage band, vaudeville and a feature, has a scale of 25-55, including tax. MGM, Fox and Paramount first-runs are maintaining 25-65 including tax.

Situation at Providence

Last week in Providence, R. I., Loew's State came down from a 50-cent top to 25. RKO Victory, formerly 35-cent top, is down to 20.

Peace Reigns in Virginia

The price war in Virginia, which had been causing box-office battles in Danville, Portsmouth and a few other places, ended with the New Year. Efforts to cause a stampede for a 10 and 15 range failed. The deluxe Richmond Loew's is maintaining its policy.

San Antonio Cuts Under Way

Price slashing in San Antonio, Texas, has started, with the Empire, first-run, cutting to a 40-cent top with a 20-cent matinee. RKO Majestic and Texas Publix maintain 50-cent tops with 25-cent bargain matinee.

Double-Features Inaugurated

With one exception, admissions in all Seattle first-runs have been reduced and double bills inaugurated. The Fox Fifth Avenue has reduced its top from 75 cents to 55, and the Fox Paramount from 75 to 55, both showing two features. Hamrick's two first-runs, the Music Box and Blue Mouse, have cut from 75 to 35, including Sundays and holidays. The Jensen & Von Herberg Liberty theatre is the only first-run in town to maintain its original scale, which is 25 cents top.

Reductions at Spokane

Spokane first and second-runs slashed prices the first of the year. Fox West Coast controls three theatres, two first and one second-run, and an ultimatum has been issued by the home office that unless gains are made all three will go dark February 17. Top prices have been reduced from 60 cents to 50 on first-runs and from 35 to 25 second-run. Other second and third-runs have cut to as low as 10 cents.

Doubling in Tampa

While the scale in Tampa has not been reduced generally many houses have instituted double featuring. Most top prices were cut last summer from 60 to 40 cents to escape federal taxation.

No Change in Washington

There is no change whatsoever in the price cutting situation in Washington, D. C. "We don't recognize depressions here," said a leading film man.

No Taxes in Delaware

The Wilmington Stanley-Warner Aldine and Loew's Parkway were the last to reduce prices below the federal tax. Both cut from 50 cents plus tax, to 40.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

William Randolph Hearst's Cosmopolitan Magazine currently presents predictions of American leaders concerning what the world might be like 100 years hence. Samuel Lionel Rothafel evidently could not prophesy that far away. He limited his predictions to 75 years, at which time, he said, "the term 'radio' will lie discarded on the junk pile of the twentieth century." Mr. Rothafel's employers, the Radio Corporation, might not like that.

The article reveals a Roxy of far more imagination than the Roxy of 18 months ago, when he first outlined the wonders of a "super theatre" in Radio City. Seventy-five years from now, predicts Mr. Rothafel, a "new 'sense-appealing cinema' will entertain man with thrills and sensations beyond the power of any form of entertainment today.

"He will not only see the sweeping terror of a forest fire, for instance, and hear its roar, as he does today. His nostrils will burn from the biting odor of the flaming spruces and pines. His face will seem hot from the beating of the flames, and his throat will seem parched by the heavy smoke."

A.'s Conning Tower further complicated matters with this:

Is it the Bitter Yen of General Tea
Or the General Tea of Bitter Yen
The Yitter-Gen of Teneral Bea

So This Is Africa

(Columbia)

Comedy

Fast, snappy and plenty hot; with riproaring comedy, lots of it decidedly risque, that makes use of scores of old gags and many new ones; continually satirizing some of the more popular jungle pictures; winding up with a wild jungle musical comedy reminscent of the racy burlesque shows of an almost forgotten day. A colorful melange of senseless but clever hokum about describes "So This Is Africa."

The really insane foolishness gets under way at once as some of the whispered history of how "Trader Horn" came to be paraded, and in this person Mrs. Martinez Johnson, the Martin Johnsons are ribbed. So are motion picture producers, as the producer goes frantic because his quarter of a million dollar African company has returned without a foot of film, and he sets out to find someone who can get him a "colossal" jungle picture.

Wheeler and Woolsey, stranded vaudevillians, contemplate a little tall window jumping because they can no longer feed their troupe of mangy, moth-eaten lions, quartered in a luxurious hotel suite, and then go trapping for horse-meat in New York's crowded streets to bag an obstinate jackass.

When the producer and Mrs. Martinez Johnson catch up with them, they unwillingly sign for the African trip and the scene shifts to the jungles, permitting a good-natured kidding of "Tarzan," with exceedingly torrid antics.

The finale is the capture of the intrepid adventurers by a tribe of voluptuous Amazons, who kill their captives with love after the sun goes down. In this sequence fast-moving dance and musical numbers are featured, and the yarn is made more ridiculous by ringing in a total eclipse. A raid of Tarzans seeking mates ensues and Alex and Burt are carried off into the jungle. A sub-title explained gag will remove the blushes and crown the whole thing with one grand laugh.

Although this show is absolutely a farce comedy, some of the action and dialogue probably will wrinkle the brows of the less liberal-minded and cause some parents to withhold their approval of it as entertainment for the youngsters.

As there is no dignity in it, neither should there be any dignity, or aything but startling foolishness, in your advertising and exploitation.

Consider it as ribald slapstick entertainment, which at times becomes sizzling; a laughing satire; a rollicking burlesque show musical comedy with Wheeler and Woolsey at their best; bill it as radically and novelly different.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

14 Juillet

(The 14th of July)

(Tobis-Rene Clair)

Romance

"14 Juillet" reminds one strongly of "Under the Roofs of Paris," which Rene Clair also directed. It describes people living in a Paris faubourg. The film opens with the French national fête day, the 14th of July, and tells about the love affair of a young florist and a taxi driver.

The beginning of the picture is marked by a fine description of the anniversary celebration, and at the end are some funny gags, but many of them apparently were inspired by other productions seen this year in Paris, even in previous Rene Clair pictures.

The central part, which contains some sentimental scenes with great finesse is, unfortunately, too long. Rene Clair seems to have lost the usual rhythm of his former pictures and diverts too much upon each personality. This tendency to insist too much on certain psychological scenes had appeared in some degree in "Nous la Liberté," his last previous production. That's why the professional audience at the press performance was perhaps a little disappointed, in spite of the brilliant and rapid finale. Many think Rene Clair wanted to make a picture with too much psychological analysis and lost himself in the details. He forgot to keep to his story, which was weak anyway. The technical work, although very good, is not of the standard of his previous productions.

Praise must be given specially to the artists:

Annabella, star in "Le Million," who here gives a wonderful performance as the young florist;

Raymond Cordy, the funny taxi-driver in "Le Million," and the leader in "A Nous La Liberté";

Paul Olivier, whom one sees in all Rene Clair films and who creates a very amusing part each time;

Pola Illery, Roumanian artist in the leading feminine role in "Sous le Toits de Paris," who plays here a pretty vamp;

Georges Rigaud, "le jeune premiere," the taxi-driver, for whom these are beginnings, and who has come through with flying colors.

It is certain from the box-office point of view that the great publicity made by the newspaper L'Intransigeant for its cinema, Les Miracles, and the name of Rene Clair will be seen by the whole of Paris. The picture should also be a success in suburban and provincial houses where pictures of poor streets and Paris fetes always go very well. Abroad, the name of Rene Clair as well as the city itself, should be factors. There is, however, more dialogue than in his previous productions. Summing up, then, this is a film which, in spite of some weakness, should evoke interest.—PIERRE AUTRE, Paris correspondent.

The King's Vacation

(Warner Bros.)

Romantic Drama

As a typical George Arliss picture, "The King's Vacation" is fully on par with his most pleasing efforts. Filmed against an elaborate background it tells a love story replete with human interest. Expert direction has been combined with fine acting to make the story seem unusually real, although it is romantic fiction. Because of the ages of its principal players, it probably will appeal mostly to the more mature adults. Yet there is enough clean, clever and inspiring entertainment to make it a satisfactory show for adolescents.

The setting is a mythical European kingdom. Phillip is bored with the routine of court and realizes the enormous expense it saddles upon the common people. Everyone is strange to him. Even his queen is but another member of the court.

An attempted assassination serves to strengthen his determination to abdicate. Doing so, he parts with Wilhelmina, his queen but never really his wife, and upon her urging goes back to Helen, the woman he married before he was called to the throne. But Helen dwells in an atmosphere more regal than his old court. Unable to understand her ambitions, Phillip finds the old love gone. A chance meeting with Barstow, after a trip to a nearby town where he has met Wilhelmina and finds a spark of real love kindling, confirms his suspicion that Helen is more interested in a younger man.

Rejecting the Lord Chamberlain's urgings to return to his throne, much to the chagrin of vainglorious Helen, Phillip returns to Wilhelmina and happiness, free of any royal cares.

The sincere simplicity of the story and the high production values which carry it along are the pegs upon which its charm is hung. Played almost completely in a subdued manner, the occasional high drama is intensified. Yet through it all runs a vein of humanness that lifts "The King's Vacation" out of the just-another-picture class and endows it with a glamour that should strike a receptive chord in those looking for fine screen entertainment.

Dialogue is rife with exceptional advertising line which, presented in a dignfied style and with the Arliss name predominating should be the means of exciting plenty of interest. Don't let your patrons get the idea that this is a costume picture, or that it is a class attraction. The time of the story is the present. The revolutionary atmosphere is incidental and is only something they have been reading about in the papers almost daily.

While it is not exclusively a woman's picture, extra efforts should be made to focus feminine interest. In situations where there have been few pictures recently that justify special tieups with women's clubs, use of that phase of showmanship might prove particularly valuable. With the Arliss draw taking care of itself among the older folk, use of the names Dick Powell and Patricia Ellis, who carry on the secondary romance, should prove effective with the younger element.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Based on the story by Ernest Pascal. Screen play and dialogue by Ernest Pascal and Maude T. Howell. Directed by John Adolfi. Photography by James Van Trees. Film editor, Owen Marks. Art director, Anton Grot. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Release date, Feb. 15, 1933. Running time, 60 minutes.

Hot Pepper

(Fox)

Comedy

In the return to the screen of the two tough marines, Quirt and Flagg, otherwise and less familiarly known as Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen, the exhibitor has something amusing, lively and entertaining to offer his patrons. For selling background he has "What Price Glory" and "The Cockeyed World," which certainly have not been forgotten. In both of them the scrapping buddies earned their considerable reputations.

In this instance, and here is a selling idea, the two are out of the marines and uniform, and in the rum and nightclub racket and civilian clothes. For the "mademoiselle" in this case there is Lupe Velez, fiery and giving a volcanic performance as the South American spitfire over whom the boys become all upset.

The picture is filled with the Lowe wisecracks, dropping in rapid succession and most of them scoring quite direct audience hits, and with numerous amusing sequences. Flagg is running highclass nightclubs, getting rich on his rum-running fleet. He meets Quirt, who proceeds to trick him out of $10,000 by posing as a revenue agent. Flagg is called to sea by a rum boat in distress, finds Lupe, a stowaway, and a demoralized crew. She persuades El Brendel, who provides amusing comedy as Flagg's chauffeur, to smuggle her into Flagg's sumptuous home. Quirt continues to tie Flagg into knots and finally emerges as owner of a large nightclub himself. Lupe is Quirt's star floor performer. When Quirt and Flagg toss a coin for her, Lupe Velez blows up, tells them both what she thinks of them. A gang raids the club and Flagg and Quirt mop them up, then quit Lupe and the racket and go in search of real excitement. The concluding sequence finds Flagg a major in the Chinese army, in his element until Quirt arrives on the scene, in the uniform of a Chinese general, with two pretty Chinese girls, to give the "horse laugh" to the raging Flagg.

The story outline will indicate numerous catchlines upon which to fasten the attention of the patrons. The return of the two marines, in civilian clothes and plenty of trouble, with Lupe Velez as the feminine dynamite, should bring them to the box office. Promise fast, lively and amusing entertainment and the result should be satisfying.—Aaronson, New York.

Destination Unknown

(Universal)

Drama

Results with this production all depend upon the individual exhibitor who both thoroughly understands the story and the prejudices, likes and dislikes of his patrons. In idea, "Destination Unknown" is daring and unusual. In development it ignores and violates universally accepted standards of screen entertainment.

The manner in which the introductory buildup sequences are presented and the lengths to which they go in portraying man's inhumanity to man, his cruelty, viciousness and avarice, are weirdly depressing, yet vividly and highly dramatic. But the point upon which the fate of this feature really is grounded is in the presentation of a character, The Stowaway, who, for your information, is a sort of reincarnation of The Christ, who works a series of miracles, which not only save the boatload of scoundrels but also may arouse all sorts of controversy as to the propriety of using a sacred character under such conditions.

A calm, during which the plight of the little boat seems hopeless is followed by another raging storm. When all hope seems lost, The Stowaway appears. First he miraculously changes cases of wine into clear water, paraphrasing the Biblical parable. He identifies himself only as a "Carpenter," another Biblical illusion. The second miracle is stopping the ship from sinking; then stars are caused to appear in the skies, by which he steers the boat. Curing Dr. Fran's withered arm follows.

In make-up and expression as well as verbal illusions, audiences are expected to understand that The Stowaway is actually The Christ. Bellamy does a splendid job with the role. He plays it with a subdued intensity. Likewise all the other characters, particularly Alan Hale, are highly effective.

Ordinary advertising and exploitation mediums can hardly be used for "Destination Unknown." If possible, see this picture before you play it. If you cannot see it in advance, lay out a straight from the shoulder campaign that will convince your patrons that they are going to see something starkly unusual and that although they may not approve of it, they cannot deny that it is a sincere effort to introduce something daringly novel.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Air Hostess

(Columbia)

Drama

Several active air sequences serve in this rather melodramatic air picture to compensate in part at least for a somewhat weak story, cut to an elderly pattern, with only the circumstances brought up to date.

The fact that the material with which the story is constructed offers rather unusual exploitation possibilities, combined with the generally active public interest in matters aerial, affords the exhibitor an opportunity to get behind the picture with an active selling campaign which, it is extremely likely, may bring an unanticipated return at the box office.

This time it is the air hostess, a young girl employed on a coast-to-coast air passenger line, whose work it is to look to the comfort of the line's passengers. Evalyn Knapp, in the title role, is attractive and does a reasonably competent job of it. Daughter of a flier who died in France, she is the pet of the flying field, but marries the impetuously reckless James Murray, war stunt flier, with ideas for a trans-Pacific flight. Things go from bad to worse at home, climaxed when Murray, searching for a financial backer for his flight and new plane development, becomes entangled, in the highly conventional screen manner, with seductive-appearing Thelma Todd. His wife leaves him to "go back home," on a train which is in danger of wreck due to a bridge washout. Murray in one plane and Arthur Pierson, a passenger pilot very much in love with Miss Knapp, in another, go in pursuit. Murray who has come to his senses, is out also to retrieve his damaged romance. Murray's wild stunt flying over the train is misunderstood, and only by crashing in front of it is he able to stop the express in the familiar nick of time.

Take full advantage of the opportunities the subject matter offers for lobby displays, advertising lines, contests involving air passenger firms and the like. The picture is moderately entertaining, with a certain interest in the mode of operation of the air lines' giant craft. Children should find it highly exciting and enjoyable.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Al Rogell. Assistant director, Arthur Black. Screen play by Keene Thompson and Milton Raison. Cameraman, Joseph Walker. Sound engineer, George Cooper. Release date, January 15, 1933. Running time, 67 minutes.

Luxury Liner

(Paramount)

Drama and Comedy

There are several elements in "Luxury Liner" that may go a long way toward stimulating audience interest, but it is not a very strong picture. It lacks anything startling in either dramatic or romantic appeal and is replete with inadequacies that crop out in both direction and acting.

There is a certain originality about the story which, although it apparently has not been used to the best advantage, provides a medium for sagacious showmen so that patrons will understand the complete story. Mainly it is a broad character study of a cross-section of a great ocean liner's passenger list. "Luxury Liner" details the reactions of all classes, from steerage to first class, to events of a few hours.

The underlying motif deals with Dr. Bernhard who, substituting for the regular physician, makes the voyage in an attempt to dissuade his wife, Sybil, from leaving him to tie up with the philandering financier, Stevanson. That fails as Sybil finds Alex becoming enamoured of Luise, killing him as she commits suicide.

gan, the ship's nurse, has made a tour of the vessel, assisted at the birth of a baby and attended to the myriad duties of a ship's doctor.

While all this is going on, Thorndyke is sermonizing on the fallacies of worldliness, and the vivacious Milli radiantly conspires to elevate herself from steerage to first-class rating, stopping only when she realizes the price she will have to pay. Bernhard and Miss Morgan, being coldly impersonal in their relations throughout, hardly justify the romance that ensues between them in the climax.

Selling points, limited as they are, should emphasize that "Luxury Liner" is a dramatic character study of the populace of a floating city. True, there is a drama, a tenseness of suspense, the love story of a husband who endeavors to save his wife from her own folly as a basis for the main plot, but the fact that it fails to jell into a coherent entirety almost necessitates switching the ticket-selling pleas to personalities. And here players, in lesser roles, particularly Alice White and C. Aubrey Smith, probably will be most appealing to your audiences. They supply the contrasting comedy and relaxation.

A campaign that takes the different characters and pictures them as factors in a human interest story may draw them. There's Brent, who wants to continue his love for his wife; Vivienne Osborne, who would toss everything aside for Morgan whose riches will provide everything; Teasdale, the opera singer who would take Morgan away from his wife; Alice White, the vivacious would-be chiseler, and Smith, whose fortune has been swept away, given to the expression of platonics; all of them revolving about the austere, intimate but always distant nurse, Zita Johann. Yet the whole thing must be handled carefully, not promising too much.

The women folk probably will be more interested in the story than men, and lines that will appeal to them are strongly recommended. The yarn, from the point of view of understanding, is for adults.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Big Drive

(First Division)

World War Scenes

Mr. A. L. Rule, himself a war veteran, has delved into the film archives of practically all the nations engaged in the world conflict to bring forth "The Big Drive," lengthy compilation of shots indicating the progress of the war and something of its staggering consequences in killed and maimed humanity.

If there was in the back of Mr. Rule's mind a thought of impressing the populace with the dread results of war, the utter futility of it, he has succeeded remarkably well. No pretty feature photoplay is this, but rather, on the contrary, a barren grim and relentless hammering home of the reality of war. Far better than any Hollywood simulation for romantic purposes is this authentic series of pictures, taken by the armies themselves on the battlefront, and from which real vantage point, without benefit of kleig lights, many a cameraman is known to have failed to return, though his precious cargo of imprinted celluloid reached the files of his government.

There is a necessarily gruesome strain running through the film. Important, yet terrible, are the scenes of a burial party, upon the shell-torn, dreary stretch of battle ground following the fight, piling with careless toss the ripped bodies of dead buddies, preparatory to dropping them into a huge hole, a common burial place. Equally sharply etched is the scene wherein a squadron leaps over the parapet to the attack, leaving one man, caught by a bullet as he leaped, lying spread-eagled against the trench side.

Pictured are numberless highlights of the conflict, including attack scenes from the famed Chateau Thierry, St. Mihiel and Argonne Forest drives. There is little favoritism shown American participation. The part played by the troops of all nations, including the Central Powers, is depicted. Perhaps the most stirring sequence in the film is that of men engaged in hand-to-hand trench fighting. Seen are the flashing bayonets as they stab into the gullets of enemy soldiers.

There is something grippingly fascinating about most of the footage, and it held the audience of the New York Mayfair Theatre. Off-screen dialogue was given in clear, interesting fashion, concluding with a plea for the abolition of war.

The selling value of this picture is, naturally, somewhat of an enigma. It is unquestionably gripping, effective, strikingly authentic, and may be sold on that premise. Stills from the picture are valuable for lobby display. Various clubs in any community should be rallied without difficulty behind the selling campaign, and even the schools, as far as the older children are concerned, might be induced to back its showing.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by First Division. Compiled by A. L. Rule from war films taken from the government archives of the nations involved in the World War. Release date, January 19, 1933. Running time, 90 minutes.

Das Schoene Abenteuer

Enchanted Escapade

(Protex-Ufa)

Comedy-Drama

Never becoming too serious, this all-German film is thoroughly sprinkled with comedy, in both situation and dialogue, and is here and there further lightened with the introduction of music, which is more than exclusively of a background nature.

There is no aid for the patron lacking a knowledge of German, in the form of the superimposed dialogue translations in English, consequently the picture must be restricted to those situations which are either located in the large metropolitan centers or in communities where a reasonably large proportion of German-speaking population may be relied upon.

The story is light, dealing with romance in its more lively aspects, an elopement, a thwarted aunt and a pompous and disappointed almost-bridegroom. The performances are uniformly good, the picture is well mounted. The exhibitor who can offer this picture to an audience which will appreciate it has the leading name to sell, that of Kaethe von Nagy, as the young girl who turns the tables on her ambitious aunt.

The aunt has everything prepared for the marriage of her niece to the punctual, paunchy and wholly uninteresting gentleman of the aunt's choice. The guests bring gifts, and surreptitiously compare one another's offerings.

Suddenly the aunt's son, in love with the niece, appears in her dressing room, and just prior to the ceremony, they escape through a window to the country home of her grandmother. The charming and completely delightful grandmother takes them for bride and groom, insists they occupy the same room. Next morning the real bridegroom arrives in a heat, the truth comes out. But when the aunt arrives with fire in her eye, the son refuses to return with her, sticking by the girl, and the aunt and the bridegroom retreat in a rout, leaving the field clear for the young couple.

An entertaining, light and rather musical comedy-drama, the film offers opportunity for diversion to those who can fully appreciate it through a knowledge of the language.—Aaronson, New York.

The Vampire Bat

(Majestic)

Thrill Drama

Majestic makes its contribution to the list of "horror" or thrill dramas with "The Vampire Bat," a mystery affair which centers about the strange deaths of some half-dozen inhabitants of a small town in Germany. All bodies are found bloodless, with two punctures in the neck made as by the fangs of a beast.

The picture moves rather evenly, principally because of the smooth performances. All do well, and the leading players' names are good marquee material, including Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray and Melvyn Douglas.

Briefly, the town is terrorized by the numerous deaths, in the belief that they are the work of the legendary vampire bats of the Middle Ages. Atwill is the physician-biologist of the town, Miss Wray his secretary, and Douglas the police inspector, in love with Miss Wray and disinclined to believe the bat theory.

Maude Eburne, as the hypochondriac with the ready tongue for medical terminology, contributes a bit of comedy with satisfactory effectiveness. The picture is reasonably well mounted, and although the identity of the killer is apparent to the audience, some little time prior to the conclusion of the picture, it nevertheless contrives to be fairly entertaining melodramatic "thriller" material. Gruesomeness has been reduced to a minimum, the narrative relying more on implication than facts to indicate the horrible. It would perhaps be much better if the youngsters did not see the picture.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Majestic. Directed by Frank Strayer. Screen play and dialogue by Edward T. Lowe. Photographed by Ira Morgan. Art director, Daniel Hall. Film editor, Otis Garrett. Sound engineer, Dick Tyler. Release date, January 21, 1933. Running time, 67 minutes.

Newslaughs

(F M S Corporation)

Amusing

First of a new series of short subjects, of which 26 are planned by the producer, F. M. S. Corporation, with Herman Friedman as the principal component of that organization, "Newslaughs" revives an old idea in admirable fashion, taking advantage of the broader scope permitted by sound. The reel, as will the others of the group, features Irvin S. Cobb, noted humorous writer, and contains numerous entertaining and amusing bits conned from the daily press of the country, selected and edited by Mr. Cobb, with musical background to the otherwise silently shown clips. Mr. Cobb, appearing on the screen, introduces the subject, breaks in later with an anecdote from his wide collection, and concludes the subject with another, which he terms the "best story of the week." The subject is good for at least a few laughs from everybody in the audience, and should prove a worthwhile part of any program. The Cobb name should help, particularly in some sections of the country.—Running time, 7 minutes.

L. J. Selznick Dies; Pioneer Producer

Lewis J. Selznick died at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon after six months' illness. At the bedside in his apartment in Sunset Tower, Hollywood, were his wife Florence, his sons David and Myron, and Irene Selznick, wife of David.

Funeral services were arranged for early Thursday afternoon at Temple B'nai B'rith, with Rabbi Edgar Magnin officiating.

One of the earliest producers and distributors in the industry, Mr. Selznick was first associated with Carl Laemmle twenty years ago as general manager of Universal. Thence he went to World Film, and in 1915 organized Select Pictures. Three years later Mr. Zelznick purchased Adolph Zukor's interest. He purchased World Film in 1920 and changed the name to Republic Film. Both Select and Republic went into bankruptcy in 1923. Mr. Selznick became inactive, but he has served as advisor to Joyce-Selznick Agency, operated by Myron Selznick.

Publix Completes Decentralization

Decentralization of the entire Publix circuit has been completed, it was announced this week by company executives. Operators of the various units are now vested with 90 per cent authority over their theatre charges, while the remaining 10 per cent, consisting largely of budgetary supervision, remains with the home office.

This situation has been described by executives as being the exact reverse of conditions prior to decentralization when 90 per cent of theatre operating authority was exercised from the home office and only 10 per cent in the field.

Fox Turns Back Midwest Houses

Decentralization of Fox theatres in the Middlewest has been ordered. Fox financial interests believe that long-range operation has proven unsuccessful, according to H. A. McClure, Fox district manager in Kansas City.

Six Topeka houses already have been returned to separate operation under Elmer C. Rhoden, Midwest division manager, and it is understood that Mr. Rhoden's former Midwest circuit will be revived as a unit separate from Fox operation.

Auditing and real estate departments are being moved from Los Angeles to Kansas City in the decentralization move. Reports are that Fox houses in Wichita also are to revert to Mr. Rhoden in a division similar to the Topeka deal.

NEW RKO-ROXY

THEY LOVED HER in Cimarron, Symphony, Back Street, Lover.

THEY JUST CAN'T RESIST HER . . . in the heart-role of the woman who branded herself with sin to save her baby.

A sensational crowd getter on the stage. An audience attractor on the screen!

PERIL AT HIGH PRESSURE!
LOVE AT HIGH SPEED!

Hollywood's romance of death-defying stunt men! They call them "Lucky Devils" IF THEY LIVE

You'll see racing autos skidding at ninety on perilous mountain curves!

You'll see a man go over a hundred foot waterfall in an open boat!

You'll see the rescue scene that failed... on the burning roof that gave way too soon!

e 'em and forget
A dame can turn
unt man yellow!"

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 157:—(A) In a motion picture theatre just what are termed "emergency lights"? (B) What are the dimensions of films? (C) Tell us just why it is important to excellence in results that film be of uniform, unvarying thickness. (D) When film is new what part of it is easily susceptible to damage? (E) What fault of adjustment will tend to increase such damage?

Answer to Question No. 151

Question No. 151 was: (A) How many wires do three-phase circuits usually employ and why? (B) For what purpose is three-phase current ideal? (C) Explain in some detail the basic principle or reason electricity is able to perform work. (D) What term is used to express work performed by current and how may we determine what horsepower is used when power consumpeion is so expressed? (E) Just what is the physical effect of resistance overcome by electric current? Note the "physical."

The following returned satisfactory answers: C. Rau and S. Evans, G. E. Doe, Lester Borst, Dale Danielson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, J. Rathburn and D. Little, H. Edwards, P. J. Cermak, J. Wentworth, P. T. Ellis.

As might be expected, none of the answers was what might be called perfect. I am crediting those who at least did as well as could reasonably be expected when dealing with so difficult a question as is involved in section A, which we will let Lester Borst discuss. He says: "Three-phase current uses three wires, each one of which represents one of the three phases with relation to another wire in the same circuit. For example, let us consider phase one. As the current or phase in this wire is ascending to maximum voltage value in a positive direction, wire No. 2 will represent the negative polarity of this impulse. Likewise the same action will be taking place between wires No. 2 and 3, and 3 and 1. We thus have three currents which by reason of the 120 degree phase separation may be transmitted on three wires."

(B) Rau and Evans answer this one thus: "Three-phase is ideal for power purposes by reason of the fact that it provides a practically steady pull on the motor rotating element. It is preferable to 2-phase not only because of the more steady pull but in that it may be transmitted with only three wires, hence there is copper saving. Moreover, a three-phase motor does not have to be brought up to speed by external means, as is necessary when single phase motors are used."

(C) There were many excellent answers to this one but I believe J. Wentworth has a bit the best of it. He says: "The basic principle is that electric current has what is equivalent to pressure and pressure is power. Something, which as yet no man quite understands, exists in one wire of a "live" electric circuit, which something (we call it current) seeks to escape into the opposite wire of that circuit because in so doing it escapes from pressure. In so escaping, the pressure (power) is expended and may by proper means be expended in the production of mechanical power."

(D) B. Diglah and O. Garling say: "The term 'Watt' is used to express work performed by electric current. Watts equal volts times amperes at the time the power is produced. Expressed in horsepower it is volts times amperes divided by 746, that number of watts being required to equal one horsepower."

(E) We will listen to W. D. Adamson and L. Simmons on this one. They say: "When resistance is overcome by electric current the power expended in the process is dissipated in the form of heat. That is the physical effect. We might add that when current overcomes resistance, power is always consumed in exact proportion to the amount of resistance overcome, which fact is, we believe, now almost universally understood."

Incidentally I might remark that more than three hundred men answered that last one by saying the physical effect was that the current was wasted.

Realizing the difficulty of section A, I invited my old friend John Hertner, president of Hertner Electric Company, to deal with it. He very kindly consented, as follows:

"Your letter of the 9th contains a question that is certainly hard to answer short of writing a book, because to give it a real understanding involves the explanation of a great deal that on the surface appears unnecessary.

"Reducing to a bipolar armature, three connections are made at points equidistant—120° in the winding—these points being connected to the outside through slip rings.

"In rotating, when connection A is under the positive brush the positive polarity of A has reached its highest value. B and C have each a negative value as compared to the midpoint between the values at the positive and negative brushes. B and C are also equal.

"Were the voltage between brushes 220 so that the positive brush could be said to have a positive 110 voltage and the negative brush a minus 110 voltage, then the voltage A to B or C would be 220, the exact value depending on a number of minor elements entering the design.

"On turning of the armature the voltage at A would decrease while one or the other of B or C would increase and the other would decrease. With every complete revolution A would pass through one positive and one negative peak.

"The answer quoted states that when A is near the maximum positive B is the negative of the impulse. This is not exactly true, because when A is at the maximum B and C share equally.

"If in this armature only two taps were taken off and at opposite points, single-phase current would result. If at four points equally spaced and oppositely connected two-phase current could be had.

"The reason three-phase is chosen is that from a practical standpoint it enables the largest output to be had from the generator and at the least expense for line wire.

"The three wires are necessary, for at all times each one will carry current to or from each of the two others."

Porter New Vice-President On Coast for RCA Victor

J. R. McDonough, president of RCA Victor, announced last week the appointment of G. Harold Porter as vice president in charge of West Coast activities, with offices at Hollywood. Mr. Porter was formerly vice president on the Coast for RCA.

Mr. Porter's new duties will include supervision of RCA Victor operations in connection with Photophone sound-on-film recording and projection equipment; sound-on-disc recording for pictures; production of Victor records of songs and electrical transcriptions for broadcasting purposes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We are going to call upon the HERALD to make a correction. In a recent editorial it was stated that Charles (Chick) Lewis, of the "Round Table" department, had been commissioned a Colonel by the Governor of Kentucky and that he was the only Colonel on the editorial staff.

Up and until now history has been silent on the matter, but the facts are that this writer was the commanding Colonel of the army of the Quillayute in 1923, which army was garrisoned on the Quillayute river at the confluence of the Bogeshiel and Soldoc rivers on the Quillayute Indian reservation on the Pacific slope of the Olympic mountains in Washington.

In addition to the commanding Colonel, the army consisted of Captain L. C. Allison, Lieutenant Charles Allison and Dad Haughton, a buck private, who had charge of the culinary department and the canteen.

For three straight weeks a terrific conflict raged between the forces of the Quillayute and the steel-head salmon and rainbow trout of the Quillayute river, the result being that the army of occupation was victorious in every battle and came off without the loss of a single man, and that's a record that any Colonel can well be proud of.

We don't wish to say anything to detract from the honor and glory of Colonel Lewis, but by gosh, we want it understood that he is not the only Colonel on the HERALD's editorial staff by a darned sight.

We send our congratulations to Colonel Lewis, and we trust that his command of the "Round Tablers" will bring honor and glory to the greatest magazine on earth, and that's no bull.

P. S. Hereafter all communications not addressed to us as "Colonel" will receive no military attention.

The money isn't all in socks. Some of it is in milk cans. We heard of a fellow who bought an eighty acre farm for twelve thousand dollars and when he and his wife went into town to settle for it he took in a milk can and he dug down in it and brought out eleven thousand dollars and then said to his wife: "Why, we are one thousand short." And she said, "Why John, you must have brought the wrong can."

Sam Blair of Belleville, Kansas, says that any man who can operate four theatres under present conditions and can look his creditors and the film companies in the face without fainting must be made out of cement. We told him we had always suspected it, but we never expected him to admit it. Mrs. Blair said to us on the quiet and asked us not to mention it to a soul (we promised we wouldn't) that she was the one who did all the work and assumed all the responsibility around the place. We judge she was right about it, for she was always busy when we called.

York, Nebraska, has two theatres, the Sun and York, both under the same management. York has her troubles, like all other places we have visited. The manager told us that business was terrible, with not much hope for an early improvement. The Sun theatre, which is a first-run house, has two prices. The downstairs price is 40 cents and the upstairs is 25 cents, and the manager told us that practically everybody bought upstairs seats. This ought to be satisfactory proof that price has a lot to do with the attendance. We have contended for some time that the day of high priced shows has gone for good. When you find out that we are wrong about it please write us. We are always willing to be corrected.

Oh, yeah, then there is another thing we almost forgot to mention, and that is that the breaking up of chain operation of theatres and turning theatres back to individual operation is one of the most hopeful outlooks for this industry that has appeared in some time. When this has finally been accomplished, and attention is centered on picture production rather than on theatre operation, we will then be well on our way out of the woods.

The old adage that "competition is the life of trade" applies to the motion picture business as well as to any other line of endeavor. To stifle competition is to stifle business, always. Rivalry in business has put more dollars in the public pocket than a take-it-or-leave-it policy ever did. And now you can go and tell Aunt Rhody that her old gray goose is not dead.

We're back in our old home town, and the first thing we had to do was to buy a load of coal. Our wife says we have to attend the furnace and that means that she intends to drive us back on the road again.

The first thing a man should ask his intended wife is whether or not she has a thorough knowledge of furnaces and furnace operation. If not, then let her start an action for breach of promise if she wants to. No man should be required to operate a furnace. There should be a law agin it, for—

He'll scatter litter on the floor,
  And fill the furnace full of coal.
Then open up the lower door
  And out the ashes roll.

He'll have the room too cold or hot
  And he'll track coal dust through the house.
We'll bet ten bucks that he cannot
  Do the job to suit his Spouse.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston, Constance Cummings—As far as drawing power is concerned, this only did fair. But many were the compliments it received from those who saw it. If I had known what a splendid picture it was I would surely have worked harder on putting it across. And that is just where this department plays such an important part. Every exhibitor who reads it should let everyone else know when a picture is worth pushing. And I say push this one hard. Played Jan. 9-10. Running time, 76 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

AS THE DEVIL COMMANDS: Neil Hamilton, Mae Clark—This is a very good picture for grown-ups, no good for kids. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 65 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENSE: Edmund Lowe—An old one from last year's Columbia product, but well worth picking up. Intensely interesting and extremely well done. It gave us the best Friday-Saturday business we have had in a year. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BEHIND THE MASK: Jack Holt—Holt as a United States secret service agent had a role that suited him to a "T." Drew nice business for Christmas Eve and everybody liked it. Played Dec. 23-24. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CORNERED: Tim McCoy—A very good western with a different story. Plenty of action and gunplay, which is what they want in this town. Business good. Played Jan. 14.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

DECEPTION: Leo Carrillo, Barbara Weeks—This is a swell athletic show and everyone will enjoy it. Plenty of action and swell entertainment for everyone. Running time, 65 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—Jones in a new role as a policeman and auto racer. Used this on bargain night and it went over great and drew a nice crowd. Comments were numerous and very favorable. A lot of these comparatively unknown little shows are going over a lot better than the socalled big ones. Played Jan. 4.—L. W. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—As a northwest mounted police, Jones risks all to trap a crook and wins promotion, reward and the girl. Good Saturday picture. Business fair. Played Dec. 31.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou—Good work for Menjou and all the cast make this an interesting subject. Well liked by patrons. Hope Columbia keeps up the good start. Played Jan. 3-4. Running time, 68 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou—Just another mystery picture. The acting good. Story not very entertaining. Did not draw.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt—Could have been built into an interesting little feature for some parts of the country—but what do our cowboys know about polo? And why did Columbia have to have the heroine raped and taking poison? Not much credit to either Holt or Columbia. Running time, 67 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

WAR CORRESPONDENT: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves—Plenty of action and a good mid-week or Saturday show.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—We are surprised that so many of our women patrons like Jones, but they do and of course we are glad. This is an outstanding western—beautiful photography, good story and charming Barbara Weeks. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 67 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—This proved to be a fine drawing card. When a picture will bring out a couple hundred patrons above average without extra exploitation, there must be something out of the ordinary about it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

THE CRASH: Ruth Chatterton, George Brent—This star's pictures have been so poor during the past year that we have had to start showing them on our cheaper admission night. This one drew average business for that night, and gave fair satisfaction. Some did not like it, other thought it okay for the price of admission. It's not a very strong picture. Played Jan. 13. Running time, 58 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

DOCTOR X: Fay Wray, Lee Tracy—For a thriller and a shocker this fills the bill. I usually get results in pictures of this kind by advertising. Those with weak hearts or those who are nervous beware. This drew slightly above average. I used the black and white print.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young—Here is a chapter from life. Wonderful picture. Wonderful story, director and cast perfect. Sound and photography excellent, and yet only 50 per cent. were pleased with the picture. The death of the mother in the end of the picture leaves a bad taste and may scare many young wives almost to death. There is much comedy relief which helps a great deal and it has a number of real thrills. The ladies will discuss the picture for a long time to come, but they all divided in opinion as to whether it is education or entertainment. One thing sure, it is different and deserves a place in every theatre on the best nights. Tell your patrons in advance exactly what they will see. Nothing in the picture to embarrass young people but I would not recommend it for children. Played Jan. 8-9-10.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MISS PINKERTON: Joan Blondell—In spite of extra advertising this failed to go over for us. Played Jan. 2-3. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—One sweet picture that will please. Well played and will please. Given a good start, word-of-mouth advertising will carry it through. Looks like a good bet from all angles. Running time, 82 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Warren William—This is one of those where you overhear the patrons remark to one another as they leave the theatre "that sure was a good picture." When they talk to one another like that the picture has pleased them. Played Jan. 10-11.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Fairly good business of its type that probably will please the majority. Robinson miscast in this one.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Good entertainment, and so said several patrons. If she can deliver pictures of this class of entertainment, she's back to stay. Played Jan. 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—A lot of hooey. Even the kids didn't like it. Acting was very good throughout but Fox should give Lowe better material to work in. Just a lot of film wasted. Played Dec. 8-9-10. Running time, 71 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Not as good as other Rogers pictures, although fairly pleasing. Christmas slump ruined business. Played Dec. 18-19. —Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Hear this team has busted up. Too bad, they were my best drawing card. This picture is no exception. Should be against the law to let them separate. —R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Got the usual Saturday night business. I still say that he isn't worth the money.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—Excellent western produced on a bigger scale than pictures usually are in this class. Business good. Played Jan. 8-9.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—This one is fine. Good entertainment for young and old. Played Dec. 23-24. Running time, 74 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—Good, clean, out-of-door action made from typical Zane Grey material. Pleased. Drew some extra business on last of week nights. Played Jan. 13-14.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Smart little comedy that pleased and had everybody laughing. Business only fair. Played Jan. 2-3-4.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers—A lot of wisecracks that put this little picture over. It drew average business. Running time, 64 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy—Entertainment and what I mean an audience picture. Raoul Walsh should be given more to direct. Played Dec. 8-9. Running time, 78 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen This is a good comedy football picture. Patrons will like it. Good for kids. Played Jan. 3-4. Running time, 65 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien, Maureen O'Sullivan—A mighty good, entertaining picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—A fine little program picture. Nothing so very big but crammed full of entertainment. Seems that everyone in this town had read the book by Kathleen Norris and result we had a fine business on the picture. Sally Eilers very good in her part. Played Jan. 11. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—One of the best, if not the best detective story we have ever run. Holds interest throughout. Played Jan. 10-11.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter, John Boles—Patrons thought this picture was silly. It was clear out of reason. Played Dec. 27-28. Running time, 76 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

SOCIETY GIRL: James Dunn, Peggy Shannon, Spencer Tracy—Good picture but didn't draw. Too much fighting. Story impossible.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Did better than average business but patrons did not like it as well as some of her others. These players set a standard in "High Society Blues" that they have never forgotten. Played Jan. 12-13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Not the best picture this star has made, but will satisfy her admirers. Farrell doesn't have much to do. Business above average. Good for the whole family. Played Jan. 8-9.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—First night a fair crowd; second night not so many; third night still less. Too much tramp hokum; he tramped it out from start to finish. He surely must have fed lots of those birds at his back door in his life as he seems to know the game in this picture. We must have pictures for us small town theatre owners that will draw second and third nights if we ever expect to make any money. Brothers, isn't this what you say? It's the only thing that will save us.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durand, Miss.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell, Joan Bennett—Can't understand where Fox conceived the idea of the title. Splendid story, gorgeous setting in the redwoods of California, remarkable, novel photography in manner which scenes are made to look like leaves of an album turning. Great cast of stars. Eugene Pallette steals the show. Fox should have left the title "Salome Jane" as original intention. Played Jan. 5-6-7.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AS YOU DESIRE ME: Greta Garbo—Just a waste of playing time and they called it a special. Sure glad "What the Picture Did For Me" is back again. Means the end of a lot of lemons that have recently been handed to us—and credit to the good ones—not to the "four star" flops. Running time, 71 minutes. —Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—A complete flop at the box office but a good picture. Can't understand why it didn't draw.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Conrad Nagel, Lewis Stone—If this picture doesn't appeal to an audience anywhere your patrons should have a diagnosis made. A little touch of pathos in it but enough comedy to offset that part of it. This is the kind of entertainment one sees so little of, packed with human appeal. Greatly appreciated by adults and children. Played Jan. 9-10-11.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—Fine. It didn't gross expenses but the picture is all there and whether you like Jackie or not, he's still a very good actor. Running time, 78 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—Plenty of comedy and action. A very good picture that drew expenses. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Fine picture of its type. Well directed and acted. But wrestling stories don't hold favor with the fair sex and they don't seem to give 'em a bow. May draw some places, but weak with me and I figure it because of type of story. Played Jan. 10-11.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston—A picture that seemed to draw fairly well although the tale was rather sordid. Some reported good and others reported terrible. One of the fifty-fifty kind that you breathe a sigh of relief on when the last reel is in the can. Played Dec. 8-9. Running time, 88 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Will please those who like horror pictures. Not good for children.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—A dang good picture that kept them laughing all the time. I would say it is their best one.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—Much better than expected. Better than "Pardon Us."—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—A very good light comedy, clean and full of good laughs. The children will enjoy the little girl who is half the show. Played Jan. 2-3-4. Running time, 60 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

PAYMENT DEFERRED: Maureen O'Sullivan, Charles Laughton.—Both release and payment should have been deferred. No excuse for it. Played Dec. 6-7.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—A good lovable picture. You will love Dressler in this one. Business good. A good family picture. Played Jan. 2-3.—Cecil Ward Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler—Good picture to good business. Everybody satisfied. Boy how I would like to see a picture with Will Rogers and Marie Dressler playing the part of his wife.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—One of the most entertaining pictures we ever played. I call it 100% entertainment. Not a dull moment. Business poor but picture good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—A fair drawing—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—The very best. I'd rate this four stars and then some.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March —Most beautiful picture of the year with a perfect cast and wonderful direction. Should be placed among the ten best of the year. Business fair considering the late run. Played Jan. 5-6-7.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—An A-1 production. The most pleasing, interest-holding and entertaining picture the star has appeared it. A good drawing card. Played Dec. 4-5.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—I drew one of the largest Sunday and Monday for a long time on this one. Norma is well liked here.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro —Another of MGM "artistic triumphs." Helen Hayes a wonderful actress, but she will go the way of our Ann Harding, Constance Bennett and others if they don't give her some real stuff. The customers these days want entertainment, and not a course in the finer art of acting. Played Jan. 12-13.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro —Exceptional picture. A beautiful and sweet love story. Miss Hayes wonderful. Not a small town picture. Pleased patrons about 50%. Played Jan. 15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Monogram

AVENGING SEAS: Anne Grey, George Barraud —Lousy. The worst thing we ever run. Foreign cast, and terrible recording. The story changes so much you would think it was a news reel. Very little business.—Alyce Carnell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BROADWAY TO CHEYENNE: Rex Bell—A very good Western picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE GIRL FROM CALGARY: Fifi Dorsay—A very good little program picture, cheaply made and the sound is none too good. Fifi sings three songs, does a hat dance, and the picture seemed to please our crowd that came on the night that we show for our lowest admission. Do not put this one on for your better class as it will not get over. Played Dec. 10. Running time, 61 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

KLONDIKE: All star—A darn good little action feature for the Saturday change. Sound is good. Picture has plenty of "meat" and thrills enough for the whole family. You'll be glad you run it. Runnings time, 68 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

THE MAN FROM ARIZONA: Rex Bell—Just fair western with a good fight.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT PATROL: Regis Toomey—A very good action picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Radio stars—Best audience picture on the market. Pleased 100% here. One of the best mid-week drawing cards for months. Patrons asked when we'd get another one like it. Played Dec. 8-9.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Radio stars—Very good and it will draw the radio fans. Some beautiful music and a high quality picture. I still insist that some good musicals would make money. The small town folks want them even if the large situations don't, but some smart producer will make one and it is my opinion that the one to do it will clean up. Paramount did not know their popular radio stars on this one. They left one of the best bets with a small part and that is Arthur Tracy, the street singer, that has a big following on the radio. Played Jan. 1-2. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby—Boy this is sure real entertainment. Will bring business to any box office. A sure bet, but we ran into muddy roads. Played Dec. 25-26. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. Fair patronage.

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Robert Armstrong, Carole Lombard, Jimmy Gleason—Better picture than was expected. Pleased our customers. Paramounts have been good this season.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princes Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—I thought it a good picture but people didn't as they stayed away. —R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—A great picture but no draw here. Dietrich and Marshall do some wonderful acting and so does Dickie Moore. Musical background very good. Weather bad. Played Dec. 15-16. Running time, 85 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich — Well received by our patrons on the whole, but this is not this star's best picture. We always do well with a Dietrich picture and business for us was above average. Not for children because of the general theme of production. Use care in selecting your supporting program of shorts. Played Jan. 4-5. Running time, 93 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP: Tallulah Bankhead—Mediocre picture and pleased only fairly well. Too heavy for our patrons. Poor box office. Played Jan. 10-11-12.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe—A picture that should please. Swell photography and recording. Action and thrills and sobs. Business good. Played Dec. 28.—Cecil Ward Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—Did not draw rental on this one. No stars in the picture. Just trying to make some, I guess.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall—Just so-so. Just the kind of story Ernst Lubitsch would make a hit from. Played Jan. 3. Running time, 65 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—Swell acting by the two leading stars but failed to get them in. Most people thought it was strictly a war picture and refused to come. It will take lots of work to put it over. Played Jan. 12-13. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth—A refreshing comedy drama that drew the chuckles. While not big, it is a picture you can meet and laugh with the patrons, about the fool comedy pulled. Played Jan. 10. Running time, 67 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—A good western along the lines of all Zane Grey stories. While our patrons do not care for this type of picture this one went over very well. Played Jan. 14. Running time, 58 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—Fine for Saturday. 'Twas the night before Christmas so you know how business was. Running time, 58 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—The laughs are fast and plentiful. The Marx Brothers are always entertainment when it comes to comedy for those who can thoroughly enjoy wisecracks and nonsense. The harpist and pianist alone are worth any patron's price of admission. Played Dec. 26-27-28. Running time, 68 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Nancy Carroll is fine in this one. Not much for the kids, but a good picture. Played Dec. 20-21. Running time, 73 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Title keeps them away.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

HOT SATURDAY: Cary Grant, Nancy Carroll, Randolph Scott, Wm. Collier, Sr.—A nice little picture. Played Jan. 14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—My patrons said that there were too many stories in this one. Just gets interesting when we start another story.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—Play this any day of the week or all week. Sort of answers the call for something different, yet it will please even the most finicky. Played Jan. 1-2. Running time, 82 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Goodbye Chevalier, as far as I'm concerned. You're dead in this town.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Very good picture of its type. Some thought too silly. I think it better than "One Hour With You." Business about average. Weather bad. Played Dec. 8-9. Running time, 90 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Excellent in every respect but distinctly a ladies' picture.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—A very good picture and should please most everyone who sees it. Business Fair. Played Jan. 11-12.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie—A good sports story. Plenty of oldtimers introduced and with Warren Hymer and Oakie going good we heard a number of laughs. Running time, 74 minutes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR LEGS: Jack Oakie, W. C. Fields, Andy Clyde, Ben Turpin, Lyda Roberti, Hank Mann, George Barbier. This picture is plumb nonsense but my patrons liked it so well that some of them stayed to see it over. This picture drew better than average but was played Jan. 1.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—A lot of my patrons like Lloyd and some of them don't, although it is a swell picture for kids, and will get the business. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 96 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. Good patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Lloyd has lost all his oldtime draw at the B. O. Constance Cummings great. Lloyd had better make more pictures if he expects to draw in the small towns. Running time, 90 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—A good picture that will not draw unless Raft means more to you than me.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—This is a good night club picture and Geo. Raft is hot stuff. Patrons like him fine. Played Dec. 18-19. Running time, 70 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. Fair patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee, Charles Ruggles—An excellent show and deserves extra advertising. Running time, 78 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: Jimmy Durante, George M. Cohan, Claudette Colbert—Different comedy and pleased all who saw it but failed to draw paying business. Played Jan. 13-14.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE HOUR WITH YOU: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—This is one of the finest entertaining pictures for the small town that I have ever ran. Sound, photography and story good. Will do better than average business in most cases. Played Dec. 25.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan—Something different in football pictures worth any exhibitor's playdates and does not necessarily have to be played during the football season. Everyone liked it. Charles Ruggles very good as the polluted reporter. Played Dec. 29-30-31. Running time, 70 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan—Very good football story with an exciting mystery thrown in for good measure. Drew fair business. Played Jan. 1.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall—Another good picture gone wrong. Couldn't get 'em in but those who saw it were pleased.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Mnroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis—A good program picture. Don't expect too much and you will be pleased with it. It drew fairly well. Audience seemed to like it as there was some laughs also compliments. Played Jan. 5-6.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft—Played on Saturday instead of western and did about as well. Good action picture. R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

WHO SENT IN THESE REPORTS?

Help! Help! A contributor to the department sent in a typewritten sheet of reports (good idea, by the way, to typewrite them if you manipulate one of those things) but was in such commendable hurry to get them to his fellow-exhibitors that he didn't sign the page. The features reported on are "Old Dark House" and "Trouble in Paradise"; the shorts, "Lights Out," "Modern Cinderella" and "Betty Boop, M.D."

Will you send your name, Mr. WTPDFM?

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Now here's one to hold them. This Raft and Roscoe Karns combination click, the story of gangster type is a dandy and directed to a "T." One can advertise this fully as big as for any gang story issued in the last two years. Played Dec. 26-27.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

VANISHING FRONTIER: John Mack Brown, Evalyn Knapp, Zazu Pitts—Here is a fine western style picture that is good for any night. Played it on a Saturday night and drew a packed house, pleased everyone.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Fine for Saturday and has Zane Grey's name to advertise.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatres, Anamosa, Iowa.

RKO

BEYOND THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene—A dandy western that you can boost. Best we have played for some time. Tell them you have a special good western.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene, Rochelle Hudson—A good western. The males came. Females stayed away.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore, Billie Burke.—A triumph for everyone connected with the making of this picture. Barrymore has never been finer and Burke is splendid. Katherine Hepburn is a real find. If your patrons like heavy drama and appreciate really splendid acting then step on this one plenty, for it will satisfy. Suggest you see picture if possible before setting dates and planning advertising campaign. Business fine. Played Jan. 11-12. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—A beautiful story with a pleasing setting. Must be "stepped on" to bring them in as no one knows anything about stage hits and successes out in this country. There is one distasteful scene in the latter part of the picture that is unnecessary and should be taken out where Del Rio sucks an orange and transfers the juice from her mouth into McCrea's to quench his thirst while he is unconscious. Played Dec. 12-13-14. Running time, 80 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

CARNIVAL BOAT: Bill Boyd—Just a crackerjack action picture that will please everyone. Plenty of thrills and the scenery in the logging camp is very good. Business fair.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—This one drew well considering that this was our first picture with this star. Pleased the Saturday night fans and I believe that Tom Keene will be a popular Western Star later on. This is an extra good western story. Played Jan. 7. Running time, 60 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—This is a wonderful picture. One of the best we have played of this type. Stars great. Story big and educational to this generation. They all should see it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE CONQUERERS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—An epic starting with the panic of the 70's and bringing conditions to the present moment, almost. With the historical value was woven a clean romance, with comedy and action nicely intermingled with everyday tragedies of life. As near a 100 per center as we could ask for. Pleased 100 per cent, too, but did not draw as it deserved. Played Jan. 15-16.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Wheeler and Woolsey, Dorothy Lee, Mitzi Green, Eddie Quillan—Here is a sure fire picture for the small town. Wheeler and Woolsey give a remarkable performance and are ably supported with good musical background. Drew good business both nights on this one.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Made a last minute switch and put this one on Sunday in place of another that was not so good. Mighty glad I switched for this one sure pleased. Story based on the life of the late Harry Reichenbach, the greatest publicity man since the days of P. T. Barnum. And does Tracy put it over? I'll say he does. Shure, it's hokum with plenty of "ruff" cracks but women "muffed" most of the ruff ones. However, the men fielded 'em clean and it brought lots of belly-laffs and that's what they want. Lupe Velez and Gene Pallette were great in their parts. Played Jan. 15-16.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

IS MY FACE RED?: Helen Twelvetrees, Ricardo Cortez—A good story and brought them in.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

IS MY FACE RED: Ricardo Cortez—Absolutely no drawing power for us—although we personally thought it a very good picture. Played Dec. 16-17-18. Running time, 67 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—This one drew the kids and they brought their parents. Result we had two days of good business and a pleasing little picture. We gave each child attending the show matinee or night one of the Little Orphan Annie Candy Bars. These cost us seventy-five cents per hundred from our local candy jobber. Would advise every one to use this candy bar with picture and to be sure that they have enough on hand for each child that purchases a ticket, for you will be surprised how many kids will attend this show. Played Jan. 4-5. Running time, 70 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd—Great action picture for Saturday.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez, Karen Morley—Just a program mystery story, delivered as a super-special. Overated 100% and a big disappointment to us as well as a heavy loss. Played Dec. 25-26.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix, Gwili Andre—In spite of the reports that this picture was poor I found the sound and photography excellent. The picture pleased everyone and I did about double ordinary business. Lots of action and will keep your patrons interested from start to finish. Played Dec. 31.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—Average picture to a shade better than average business for Sunday and Monday. Miss Bennett will not be the highest salaried screen lady very long unless her producers dig up better stories. Played Jan. 8-9. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

STATES ATTORNEY: John Barrymore, Helen Twelvetrees—What a swell picture. A perfect cast and pleased 100%. Barrymore superb. A bit spicy in spots, not exactly for kids. Played Jan. 14. Running time, 80 minutes.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

STRANGE JUSTICE: Marion Marsh—Good average show that no one will kick on. Okay for midweek and suitable for family trade. Did not draw average business probably on account of almost zero weather. Played Jan. 11.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

SYMPHONY OF SIX MILLION: Ricardo Cortez, Irene Dunne—This is a very good picture and drew over average. Is a little deep for the average small town. Played Dec. 23-24.—W. L. Stratton, Challis Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD: Constance Bennett—Very good but Bennett has no drawing power here. Business only fair.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

State Rights

THE PASSION PLAY: German cast—Members of the clergy got out and boosted this one. Can't rate its value as entertainment very highly but as a religious theme there were no complaints—and not much praise either. But with the ministers behind it there is nothing to lose. Played Dec. 6.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

Tiffany

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry, Beryl Mercer—Very good picture. Patrons liked it. First good independent we have had. Played Jan. 5-6.—Alyce

Carnell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

POCATELLO KID: Ken Maynard—Proved a good draw for us. We used to play all the Maynards on the First National program some years ago and I think everybody was glad to see Ken and Tarzan back again. This pleased very well. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 61 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THOSE WE LOVE: Mary Astor—Good entertainment. The average movie fan will like it very much. While I am reporting on the picture, I want to recommend that every small town exhibitor buy "Lena Rivers" produced by this company. It will make you a lot of money. Take it from me, buy "Lena Rivers," advertise it big and you'll be surprised. Played Jan. 6.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

United Artists

CONGRESS DANCES: Lilian Harvey — Nothing fifty-fifty about this film. All reports were that it was rotten and don't blame them. Played on any date but Christmas would have been catastrophe but the dear public was in a forgiving mood and we only got razzberry instead of the ax. When I advertise a Liberty four star picture now, I close the show and take a vacation. Played Dec. 25. Running time, 83 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—Took a flop on this. R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford, Walter Huston—Will get the money if you go after it. Pleased some, others not. However would advise you play it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—The biggest flop I've ever taken. If this is a small town picture then I'm a good bricklayer.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

WHITE ZOMBIE: Bela Lugosi—Terrible.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy—Well liked. Lots of action.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien—Best air film since "Dirigible." Step out, boys. Running time, 80 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Gloria Stuart—Good picture and drew the men folks in.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—A wonderful picture and after the performance that Dunne put through in this role of the back street woman, she should get the high honors. It is the most finished of any that we have run to date. Usually it is not the type of picture that goes over very well in a small town, but thanks to Dunne it went over with a bang. She has made a name for herself as far as our audience is concerned. They lauded her to the skies when they exited. Running time, 84 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—a high class picture that, contrary to reports, will not please 100%. A very sentimental slow moving picture that will not greatly entertain your male patrons. For the children under 16 it means nothing. However, most of the ladies will rave about this production and for me it did about 20% above normal receipts. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—A good drawer for my town.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

EAST OF BORNEO: Charles Bickford, Rose Hobart—Just a picture. Lots of crocodiles, animals, excitement. Gruesome in spots. Played Jan. 7.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown—You can boost this one. Plenty of comedy. Think the kid in this is extra good. Play it with the kids. Good Friday and Saturday show. You can't go wrong on this one. Not much at the box office. Tell them it's good.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kan. Small town patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Westerns always draw for me. This Tom Mix puts out the thrills for the kids. Plenty of action in "Hidden Gold." Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 58 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

LAW AND ORDER: Walter Huston, Harry Carey—Good Western that had the Saturday fans on edge of seats. Huston, Carey good in their roles. Absolutely void of love interest. Business bad account of weather. Played Dec. 17. Running time, 67 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff, Zita Johann—Nice work by stars, direction good, and pleased two very good audiences for us on January 7 and 8. Karloff is certainly making a reputation for himself. Considering the times, Universal pictures have been clicking very good for us and we believe their product this year, or at least so far, is very good for small towns.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan—Just fair. Another columnist and broadcasting story that passes on the dirt. One of the old vicious cycles. Not much different from all the other pictures of this type. It will take a lot of selling to get them in. Carl Laemmle cannot pat himself much on the back on this one. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan—A good picture and drew well.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie—Had more squawks on this than anything I have run for many months. Too much gushing dialogue. After reading several poor reports I tried to sub a last year's show for this but couldn't get anything I wanted, so went through with it. Business was way above average the first night as the trailer was good but the second night was very poor. Played Jan. 7-8.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie—Absolutely the poorest picture ever made. Should have pulled it after the first performance. The stage play was good but don't let 'em tell you the picture is good.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

TEXAS BAD MAN: Tom Mix—Mix and Tony back on our Saturdays look like old times. Every budding "Tom Mix" in the village likes these little westerns. Hope Mix changes his mind about quitting. Played Jan. 7. Running time, 61 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—A mediocre program picture. Only picture from this firm we have not liked. Poor business. Played Dec. 29-30.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—The original and by far away the best of the newspaper column pictures. Can't help but please your patrons. The exploitation angles are unlimited and any extra advertising will more than pay for itself for here's the kind of a show that makes happy patrons and box office. Business great for us. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 84 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Very timely. Played it Wednesday, Thursday and Friday to exceptional business. Everybody liked it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—A mighty fine piece of entertainment. We believe the work of Frank McHugh and Aline MacMahon was up with the two stars, and McHugh gave our patrons many good laughs. Drew better with the younger folks than the older. This picture should please any audience. Played Jan. 14-15. Running time, 68 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa.

THE PURCHASE PRICE: Barbara Stanwyck, George Brent—A picture of the type of "So Big," only this time they raise wheat instead of cabbage. It seemed to please our crowd and drew better than average business. Would not run it on the night on which best pictures were booked, as it's only a program picture and rather raw in spots. Played Jan. 6. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Chic Sale—Fine picture. Good entertainment for everyone. Drew them in. Sale has drawing power here. Played Dec. 29-30.—Alyce Carnell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—We will perhaps never run a better picture than this one, or one that will please our patrons better, that is, those few who saw it. For we must report that this fine example of clean entertainment drew the poorest Wednesday and Thursday business we have done in months. When you play this one try and get behind it with some kind of advertising that will get them out, for once they get in the theatre they are sure to like the show. Running time, 72 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

World Wide

COME ON, TARZAN: Ken Maynard—A rough and rowdy western. Kind they like here. This star is getting better every time we play him, at the box office and with the public too. Business good. played Jan. 7. Running time, 61 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

THE CROOKED CIRCLE: Ben Lyon, Zasu Pitts—Very good mystery comedy. Afforded us an ideal subject for New Year's eve midnight show and patrons laughed long and loud. Business good. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Peggy Shannon — An interesting little picture that pleased but did not draw. In fact it established a new low for Monday and Tuesday dates. Played Dec. 19-20. Running time, 71 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MAN CALLED BACK: Doris Kenyon, Conrad Nagel—A very good picture. Stars extra good. Business very poor but satisfied all we got.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THOSE WE LOVE: Mary Astor—No drawing power at all for us. Fair little picture that might have gotten by with a serial. Played Jan. 3-4. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BIRTHDAY PARTY: This is a reissue of an old Mickey Mouse and is rather good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CURIOS-TRAVELOGUES-CARTOONS: All are very good 1-reel subjects.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

LAMBS GAMBOLS No. 3: Another good two-reel subject with excellent music. Eliminate the last act, a French farce.—Charles Niles Niles Theatres, Anamosa, Iowa.

Educational

ALASKA LOVE: Couldn't say much for this. Just two reels of tragedy.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ANYBODY'S GOAT: Good comedy. One reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminance, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIG FLASH: Harry Langdon—If all of Langdon's new comedies are as good as this one, we certainly want them. This is one of the best two-reel comedies ever on our screen. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE CANNON BALL: Andy Clyde—Don't miss running this. It's a knock out. All the kids and most of the grownups stayed to see it the second time. Two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHINA: Poor cartoon.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FALSE IMPRESSIONS: Lloyd Hamilton, Majorie Beebe—Good for some laughs in the typical Sennett style. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

JINGLE BELLS: A good Terrytoon. One reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE LORELEI: Terrytoon — Only fair — A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE CHANCE: Bing Crosby—All you want in a comedy plus Bing's singing. Two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHOPPING WITH WIFIE: Andy Clyde—Very much enjoyed by everyone. Well worth running. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TORCHY ROLLS HIS OWN: Ray Cook—Just about as poor as they come. That's all I can say about it. Not worth running. No laughs and not much action. A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

Fox

MAGIC CARPET: One of the best of 1-reel subjects. Running time, 1 reel.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

SILVER SPRINGS: Magic Carpet—These shorts not so good, synchronized only. People are used to an announcer in other shorts of this nature and without this they just do not register.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A LAD AN' A LAMP: Our Gang—This is the best Our Gang comedy we have played in a good while.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

BARBADOS AND TRINIDAD: Fitzpatrick Traveltalks—Not as good as some of the others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang—The rascals are at it again and this time they are. Running time, 20 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

FROG CARTOONS: Flip The Frog—These cartoons are not as good as some on the market, but will get by as a filler. Sound as a whole not up to MGM's standard.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

MICROSCOPIC MYSTERIES: Oddity—Did not go at all with ladies. If you don't please them, it's no good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MUSIC LESSON: Flip the Frog—Good cartoon.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

THE POOCH: Our Gang—One of the best Our Gang comedies. Spanky and Stymie practically steal it from the other youngsters. Running time: 20 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

SNOWBIRDS: Ski jumpers and very good. Got some odd effects through manipulating the camera.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THE SOILERS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd — A scream, better than their usual comedies. Running time, 18 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

SEA SPIDERS: Pearl divers and mighty interesting. One reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TAXI FOR TWO: A couple of nuts—Slapstick and lots of it. Some said funny. Others silly but it is 2-reel comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

WHAT PRICE TAXI: Taxi boys—Not so good. Rather disappointed in their performance. A few laughs. heir first comedy here. Possibly capable of doing better. Running time, 19 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

YOUNG IRONSIDES: Charley Chase—Not as good as some of his others. Will please kiddies.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP CARTOONS: I believe these cartoons are getting better all the time. My patrons like them better than Mickey Mouse, and I am running both. The sound on these cartoons is wonderful and the cartoon is original and clever. Get the Betty Boop and Bimbo buttons and give them to the kids. The Bimbo and Betty Boop dolls are clever, and worth the price for advertising.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

BETTY BOOP FOR PRESIDENT: Betty Boop—One of the cleverest cartoons that anybody has put out any time. Set it in for around March 4. It will make a hit. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DOWN ALONG THE SUGAR CANE: Had a lot of fun singing this because everybody knew it. One reel.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DINAH: Mills Brothers—Another nice Mills Brothers' novelty. However, don't think it quite up to their first one. When you play this advertise it. People like them and they should appeal. Lots of favorable reaction on many of the good shorts.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

STOPPING THE SHOW: Betty Boop cartoon—These are always good.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

UP POPS THE GHOST: Clyde Cook, Mack Swain—Good comedy. Lots of fun. They'll enjoy it. Running time, 20 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

UPS AND DOWNS: Betty Boop—A very interesting cartoon.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE AIR: Tom Howard—Only about fifty per cent of my audience appreciate or enjoy Howard. Others think he is too dumb or silly. Print bad. Running time, 18 minutes.—Howard B Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

RKO

BARNYARD BUNK: (Cartoon)—Extra good. Snappy music and action. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

CLARK & McCULLOUGH: If you haven't got these comedies, get them as soon as possible. Advertise them heavily on shows where you have to make a small town swallow a picture made to please New York critics instead of the American public.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Small town patronage.

EASY STREET: Charlie Chaplin—Opinion divided on this Chaplin reissue. Music and sound effects were good, but it seems that the fans want some talk.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

HERE'S CHALLENGE, YOU RHYMESTERS

Gerald Stettmund, of the H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla., has made application to be designated "the official poet" of "What the Picture Did For Me." Moreover, to back up this application, he has sent us a sample of his ability, and asks if anyone can do any better. We think it's pretty hot stuff. What do you think?

Now gather 'round Brothers, this
Dept. has risen,
'Cause Bill reads mine, and I read
his'n.
It's the only way we can really tell
Just what pictures makes the box-office well.

Seems like this reporting, boys,
Brings back the good old time joys.
Daddy Jenkins sure rung the bell,
And brung us all right back from h - - -!

Come on now you poetasters, and see if you can give Gerald a run for his laurels. Of course it's taken for granted that Jaysee waives his own rights. You all know that Jenkins wields a wicked werse himself.

FARMERETTE: Aesop Fable—One of the best cartoons yet, and by far the most original. Sound splendid. Running time, 7 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

THE GOLF CHUMP: Edgar Kennedy—Funny in spots, but on the whole, just another Kennedy comedy and they are all the same. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

JITTERS THE BUTLER: Clark and McCullough in a riot of comedy. Play this on Sunday.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

MICKEY'S GOLDEN RULE: Kid comedy. Play this one strong with the kids. It's an extra good comedy. Everyone, big and small, fell for this one. Two reels.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S HOLIDAY: Good Kid comedy.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S HOLIDAY: Mickey McGuire—A dandy 2-reel subject. So many comedies are flops. Running time 18 minutes.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

NIAGARA FALLS: Good, clean comedy. Two reels.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS: Have run Pathe News for a year and find it very satisfactory.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS: I sincerely believe that this reel is the best news on the market today, barring none. Sound and photography always good. I use one issue a week.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

SINGAPORE: A very good travel with nothing particularly new presented, but interesting to most patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

STONE AGE ERROR: Aesop Fable—Good cartoon, sound good, clever and original. Running time, 7 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

STOUT HEARTS AND WILLING HANDS: All star—Here's a darn good comedy. Just like the oldtimers. Very different than the usual run of present day hokum. Almost a takeoff from Paramount's skits of oldtimers in their Screen Souvenirs, Keystone cops, a villain, a gal, the farm and a mortgage. Running time, 20 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

VENICE VAMPS: Fables—One of the best, excellent.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BUGS IN LOVE: Another great Silly Symphony. Give it extra billing.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

THE KLONDIKE KID: Mickey Mouse—This is a very funny cartoon.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

Universal

THE CROWD SNORES: Cartoon—All of the Universal shorts have been very good. Running time, 1 reel.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE FINISHING TOUCH: Skeets Gallagher, June Clyde—One of the best and funniest comedies in a long time. Our patrons even stopped to tell us how much they enjoyed it. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

HESITATING LOVE: Louise Fazenda, Marie Prevost—Two reels of entertainment that will please both young and old. A comedy you should play. Played Jan. 7-8.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa.

HOLLYWOOD HALFBACKS: A great Saturday night comedy.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

MEET THE PRINCESS: Slim Summerville—Got the laughs but they cheated me out of about fifty feet of the ending and that was the big punch so it didn't satisfy. Two reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SEA SOLDIERS' SWEETIES: Slim Summerville—A great comedy that brought the house down.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

SEA SOLDIERS' SWEETIES: Slim Summerville—A good comedy but all of Universal's comedies played have very poor sound. Running time, 19 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

UNION WAGES: Louise Fazenda—Plenty of laughs, and though the action gets a bit rough at times, it is funny. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

Warner-Vitaphone

CROSBY, COLOMBO AND VALLEE: A musical cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

CROSBY, COLOMBO AND VALLEE: (Cartoon)—Better than average and has quite a few laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

HERE, PRINCE: Joe Penner—A good 2-reel subject. Running time, 2 reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

TIP TAP TOE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Wonderful dancing by the two stars in this clever two-reel subject. Our audiences always like this kind of shorts. Will add much to any program. Played Jan. 14-15. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. G. Budd, Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa.

TIP TAP TOE: Mitzi Mayfair, Hal LeRoy—Like most all Warner musical shorts, this one was a Whiz. These popular kids of Ziegfeld's Follies sure shake wicked "dogs" and the music was mighty good too.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

YOU CALL IT MADNESS: Richy Craig, Jr.—A lot of nonsense, but good for laughs. Best for midweek as lack of action makes it uninteresting for children. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

Serial

LIGHTNING WARRIOR: Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—Have played half of this and think it is as good as any serial I have had. Sound is good and plenty of action.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Theatre, Kasson, Minn. Small town patronage.

Nat Levine

DEVIL HORSE: Harry Carey, Frankie Dorre—A real serial that has cast, story, action and excellent photography and sound. Our print is new and we get results but the wild horse and wild boy get the business. If you want a lot of fast action, buy and book this one.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RKO Serial

LAST FRONTIER: Creighton Chaney—Has not been a satisfactory serial to date. Repeat too much of former chapter at the beginning. Too many impossible situations and not enough comedy.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.
